There is no doubt that the Bill brought forward by the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford will make a significant and important contribution. Not only her constituents, but all those affected by fly tipping and all those involved in the legitimate trade of waste disposal have every reason to be grateful to her. I hope that the House will give the hon. Lady's Bill a robust and resounding Third Reading and that it will successfully continue on its way to another place.

1.26 pm

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): With regard to this piece of legislation, I say to my hon. Friend the Minister, "Regulations, regulations and more regulations". Our party is supposed to be the party which, recognising that we are over-regulated in our businesses and industries, has made a special point of trying to remove regulations and to limit the number of new regulations put on the statute book.

I have taken a great interest in small businesses all my political life. The Bill will undoubtedly have a major effect on such businesses, which have small lorries to carry waste from one place to another. There are many small businesses in the building industry. My father was a demolition contractor and I have lifelong experience of travelling to and from waste tips to get rid of rubbish, so I know a great deal about the subject. There are many waste tips in my constituency, which is part of the Thames estuary. It houses many old gravel sites and one of the largest waste disposal contractors in the country, Corys, which has one of the most advanced plants for dealing with and disposing of toxic waste.

I do not speak merely to be controversial but because I believe there are a great many errors in the idea behind the Bill. No one wants rubbish to be dumped in a field, in someone's backyard or wherever. Everyone believes that people who do that should be caught and severely punished. However, there is a great difference between that and new regulations requiring special licences for vehicles which merely carry a bit of builders' rubbish from one place to another. People with lorries already have to obtain heavy goods vehicle licences, and one virtually needs a degree in law to understand the relevant regulations. I am not exaggerating when I stress the degree of pressure that this places on lorry owners who do a good job of taking rubbish sites to proper waste tips.

We also make it difficult for people to open sites where waste can be disposed. Again, I speak from experience. When one of the obviously suitable gravel pits in my constituency is offered for tipping, enormous numbers of people always protest. Those who live nearby do not want lorries travelling down the lanes and do not like the idea of having rubbish nearby although they all help to generate it. Protests are always made and we end up with fewer and fewer sites on which people can honestly and legitimately dump rubbish. We make it difficult for them to do so. This is the other side of environmentalists' problem. The hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) shakes her head, but a large part of my constituency business consists of people complaining either about taking waste to sites or about waste disposal.

If those who produce chemical waste were monitored —we know which firms make noxious or toxic industrial chemicals—we could ensure at that point that the waste would be properly disposed of. We could come to grips with the issue. However, making life more difficult for people who have to obtain special licences for their vehicles is unduly interventionist.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My hon. Friend makes an important point. She is well known for speaking on behalf of small businesses, and the whole House much appreciates her efforts on their behalf. Would she be satisfied if we said that when we come to make regulations we shall appreciate her advice as to their effect on the people for whom she is concerned, who are involved in a legitimate trade but who may not have all the authority of large firms behind them?

Mrs. Gorman: I thank my hon. Friend the Minister, and I am grateful for her suggestion. Since I appear to be in a bargaining position, before imposing these over-onerous regulations will she consider the development of more sites for legitimate tipping and obliging people who produce toxic waste to register, so that we know who is producing the rubbish? That would be better than giving powers to coppers to stop every lorry travelling from A to B with a bit of old rubbish, and making lorry drivers take out licences or be looked on as potential criminals.

Mrs. Bottomley: It is well known that the Government hope to bring forward comprehensive legislation on waste at the earliest opportunity. We would much appreciate the thoughts and comments of my hon. Friend. There is no doubt that she will have many more opportunities to develop her important points at much greater length.

Mrs. Gorman: I thank my hon. Friend. I hope that what I have extracted from her does not turn out to be waste, and I hope that she will not fly tip my ideas.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Mr. Illsley: The Opposition are concerned that this measure has been introduced through the private Member's Bill procedure. We are aware of the Eden report on this subject of a few years ago, and of the Government's response to it. In effect, the Government accept most of the committee's recommendations. We should have liked the Government to introduce a comprehensive measure dealing with the self-verification of weights and measures equipment. We believe that this Bill deals only with a section of the Eden committee's recommendations and does not implement them comprehensively.

Amendment No. 66 seeks to delete the word "Secretary of State" and to insert the words

"local weights and measures authority".

The amendment goes to the heart of the Bill. We think that the appropriate authorities to deal with weights and measures inspection and verification should be local weights and measures authorities and trading standards officers. Which, therefore, is the appropriate body to grant licences under clause 1?

There are a number of reasons why I should like the local weights and measures authorities to be the licensing authorities rather than vesting that power with the Secretary of State. The latter course would involve a centralised system of weights and measures administration with powers placed on the Secretary of State and would move us away from the local aspect of weights and measures administration. It is a fact that every local authority has a department that deals with weights and measures legislation and contains trading standards officers. The localisation of weights and measures administration should be retained.

In any event, if the Secretary of State were the licensing authority, he would have to seek the advice and co-operation of a host of other organisations on the applications for licences that he would receive. As it is more than likely that those organisations would be local weights and measures authorities together with organisations such as the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, we feel that the involvement of the local weights and measures authorities should be retained.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): Is my hon. Friend satisfied that there has been sufficient consultation with the weights and measures authorities? All hon. Members who have been involved with consumer affairs legislation in the House for a long time are worried that there may not have been sufficient consultation. Does my hon. Friend agree that such consultation is important in determining our attitude to the amendment and to the Government's control of the Bill as a whole?

Mr. Ilsley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for raising that important point. It might have been better if the promoter of the Bill, the Government, the local weights and measures authorities and their representatives had been brought together to discuss a comprehensive Bill on which all parties could agree because, although there is a substantial measure of agreement within the local weights and measures authorities on the recommendations of the Eden committee, there is not a great deal of agreement about the provisions of the Bill which seeks to enact only part of the recommendations of that committee. I am sure that the local weights and measures authorities would be only too pleased to participate with the Department of Trade and Industry and with the manufacturers of weights and measures equipment in drawing up some proposals for a framework for legislation on this matter.

Centralising the power to grant licences in the Secretary of State would mean that he would either utilise the framework and the facilities that are already available—the local weights and measures authorities—or adopt an attitude of granting blanket licences to any manufacturer who applies. That would defeat the whole object of weights and measures legislation. I stress that we can trace the origins of such legislation as far back as the Magna Carta.

Although we talk about safeguards in weights and measures legislation, it would seem to defeat the whole idea of protecting the public from being short measured if we were to give a power to the Secretary of State, without adequate safeguards, to give a blanket licence to anyone making an application.

I emphasise that the local weights and measure authorities have considerable experience in that area, and I suggest that they should be responsible for the granting of those licences. Indeed, by their very name, the local weights and measures authorities are the obvious candidates to run any type of licensing arrangements. They are doing the job now and they are doing it well. The public have confidence in them. That confidence is increasing, and that is borne out by the response that most local trading standards officers receive to their reports.

Trading standards officers have influence within their authority areas. Why should we remove from them the whole remit for weights and measures administration and pass it to the Secretary of State? Those officers are doing the job and would be the obvious people to grant licences. If the power to grant licences is left with the Secretary of State, he will have to utilise weights and measures officers and trading standards officers or employ trained staff. It would be ridiculous if local weights and measures officers were not used by the Secretary of State. Why not give them the job and the authority to grant the licences to be applied for by various manufacturers?

Local weights and measures authorities have been operating for years and have built up local knowledge of companies, operators and people who use weights and measures equipment. Such local knowledge will be essential for the Secretary of State before he grants a licence. Again it seems logical that the ideal candidate to supply that local experience and knowledge is the local weights and measures authority. That would also enable local weights and measures authorities to combine inspection with other aspects of trading standards in their locality. The assessment about the suitability of a company for a licence could be combined with the normal day-to-day workings of local departments, and that would save time, effort and money. Local weights and measures departments have instant knowledge about the suitability of candidates applying for licences.

The Bill requires the provision of various controls such as audit and accreditation mechanisms. It also requires the inspection of the verification systems that will be put in place for manufacturers. Once again it will be left to local trading standards officers to control and monitor the audit and accreditation systems that will have to be used by manufacturers. It would be a duplication of effort to bring in local weights and measures officers under part of their remit to advise the Secretary of State when he is considering licence applications. The authorities should be given the power to carry out that job at the same time as they are verifying audit control, quality control and accreditation systems.

The job of considering the suitability of an applicant for a licence will enable the local authority to accumulate knowledge and experience of manufacturers in its area. That experience can be used to make instant decisions about licences and that will cut down on the bureaucracy of shuffling papers between local authorities and the Secretary of State. The local weights and measures authority is on the spot and has the experience, the knowledge and the capability to carry out the necessary functions in a short time. Of course it could also do the job much cheaper.

As well as being able to grant licences, the local weights and measures authority could also be an adviser. Before or after a licence application the authority could advise manufacturers on how to set up a self-verification and accreditation system or a quality control system. During that process of giving advice or advising on these systems, the local weights and measures authority would be able to accumulate the information required for the granting of a licence. Indeed, it would be on the spot to advise a company about what measures it would need to employ to qualify for a licence offered under the terms of this Bill rather than applications being made through the system to the Secretary of State, with a licence possibly being refused and further amendments being required. In those circumstances, much bureaucratic effort is involved in the granting of a licence.

1.45 pm

The Eden committee said in its report that any scheme of self-verification must engender the same confidence as verification by weights and measures inspectors. If we are to maintain public confidence in the weights and measures system in this country, licensing should be left with the local authorities and not given to the Secretary of State.

Ms. Joyce Quin (Gateshead, East): Does my hon. Friend agree that it would seem to be more sensible for the Government to act on all the recommendations of the Eden committee by bringing forward its own Bill? Why has it taken the Government so long to act, and why are we having now to deal with a partial implementation of the Eden recommendations through a private Member's Bill rather than deal with a comprehensive Government measure which would have appeal to all parties concerned?

Mr. Illsley: We would obviously have liked and would have co-operated in consultation on the full implementation of the Eden committee proposals, or as near to that as could be achieved. The Eden committee reported in June 1985, the Government's response being completed a year later. So the Government have had three years in which to bring forward a comprehensive Bill to cover these aspects of the weights and measures legislation. Even at this late stage, we would still like to see the Bill withdrawn with some commitment to a Government Bill and consultation with all the appropriate authorities.

I was saying that public confidence has to be maintained in the weights and measures authorities and legislation. As that public confidence presently rests with local weights and measures authorities, if the provision before us is accepted, that confidence will be transferred to the granting of licences.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Does my hon. Friend agree that much of the good work of the local weights and measures authorities would be destroyed if we had a central licensing system? Another great danger is that many local authorities now have inter-departmental arrangements between one area and another, enabling information to be transmitted very quickly to put on warning other areas of the country against fraud or other criminal acts. That, too, could be at risk.

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend demonstrates adequately another reason why local weights and measures authorities have a stake in being the licensing authority under the Bill. Through their knowledge, networking and the facility they offer, authorities are able to work together. Their extensive knowledge in the field is what presses us to move these amendments to include them as the licensing authority.

The Eden committee recommended independent assessment, accreditation and surveillance. If amendment No. 66 is accepted, we would be moving some way towards the Eden committee recommendations. Paragraph 117 of the Eden report states that the authorities should be responsible to the Secretary of State and should also be publicly accountable. It stated that they should establish and publish criteria for accreditation and assess, accredit and register manufacturers. It also recommended that they should maintain a register and have many other responsibilities. Eden produced a long list of recommendations which he believed were necessary for the authority which would deal with the legislation. I believe that Eden never envisaged the idea that the Secretary of State would be the sole licensing authority. He believed that weights and measures authorities would be given that role.

Eden recommended that the authorities should be responsible to the Secretary of State through some kind of mechanism.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): One of my worries about the Bill is that it gives the Secretary of State powers to fiddle. That is roughly it. The manufacturers are saying that they do not want an independent body to test their machines. They want the power to make them, repair them, and to fix the dials. That is in line with this Government's policies. They have fiddled 19 different sets of unemployment figures, they have fiddled the cost of living figures, and they have threatened to fiddle the balance of payments deficit because it is so embarrassing. Now along comes this Bill from the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin). The Government are so blatant that they are introducing Bills under the guise of private Members' Bills to fiddle the figures. That just shows how arrogant the Government have become.

Only a few days ago the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare could have introduced his Bill, but what happened? He fiddled it away. It disappeared from view and was scheduled for another Friday. Then some Government fiddler came along to the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare and jogged his elbow. He said, "Get your Bill off. Fiddle it away." He fiddled it away. He sat in this place for an hour and a half and then decided to take it off at the Government's behest. The whole thing is surrounded by fiddling. It fits in with the Government's performance in trying to trick and deceive the nation.

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend has made one or two points in his brief intervention which I should like to address.

The fact that the Bill is being presented as a private Member's Bill does not exactly inspire confidence in the hope that the Government will protect weights and measures legislation. Public confidence would have been maintained had we had a Government Bill open to the full rigours of debate, with a Committee stage and consultation.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Eric Forth): I am at a bit of a loss to understand the difference in principle between the private Member's Bill on the very important subject of fly tipping and waste control and this measure. Surely it is equally legitimate for Members on both sides of the House to come forward with such measures.

Mr. Illsley: I am not seeking to deny Members the right to bring forward Bills on whatever subject they choose. That point is for another debate at another time.

Weights and measures legislation and weights and measures authorities must maintain public confidence. In such a delicate area as this, perhaps a Government Bill involving adequate consultation, taking into account the Eden committee's recommendations in full, would have been more suitable.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) also referred to tolerance exploitation, and that will be raised later in our proceedings.

Paragraph 124 of the report sets out three scenarios for a self-verification system. They include the British Standards Institution, the National Weights and Measures Laboratory and the National Metrication Coordinating Unit. All three scenarios are set out diagrammatically and are explained in some detail, but not one of them takes recourse to the Secretary of State as the highest authority. A supervisory body exists in all three cases, but at no point is it ultimately or immediately responsible to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Bermingham: Earlier, my hon. Friend mentioned public confidence in the Government. One cannot have confidence in a Government when, as in the case of the factories inspectorate, the number of public inspectors has decreased, as has also occurred in respect of Admiralty searches and the number of marine surveyors. If weights and measures also passed into private hands, what guarantee would their be that proper verification would take place—and that verification or self-verification of the small repairer will be adequate to guarantee the accuracy of weights and measures systems?

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend's comments are self-explanatory. Public confidence must be maintained in any weights and measures legislation, as must the current local accountability.

Amendments Nos. 48 and 73 relate to provisions that we feel should be included in the Bill for regulating licences. We propose four different conditions, because the regulations set out in clause 1 relating to matters that must be taken into account by the Secretary of State when considering licence applications are inadequate, and they should be substantially strengthened.

Licence conditions and regulations should be clearly defined, and those relating to any self-verification scheme must be particularly well understood. The Bill currently requires only that a licence application should be in writing, accompanied by a fee, and that a record of it should be kept. Provided that a manufacturer can write and can afford the fee, he can obtain a licence. The Bill imposes no further conditions as to the suitability or otherwise of any manufacturer or body applying for a licence under the Bill.

Weights and measures legislation is a technical area, as is evidenced by the Weights and Measures Act 1985, and we are concerned that the Bill is loosely drafted. Licence conditions should be clearly stipulated, but the Bill contains only a vague proviso mentioning certain requirements of the Secretary of State—not conditions, but only requirements. We believe that licence applications should comply with various conditions. The first is that the applicant satisfies regulations to be issued from time to time by the Secretary of State in consultation with local weights and measures authorities. We believe that they are the appropriate authorities to draw up regulations in conjunction with the Government in ensuring that weights and measures legislation retains public confidence.

Under the second condition, schemes must be accredited and audited in accordance with BS5750, which deals with quality aassurance schemes, or other quality assurance systems which the Secretary of State may introduce. The third condition provides for the National Weights and Measures Laboratory and local authority trading standards officers to accredit licensees. The fourth condition provides for assistance by the NWML in auditing manufacturers.

There must be confidence in any self-verification scheme introduced under licence or the Bill, and that would involve local weights and measures inspectors. There should be independent assessment of quality management systems, accreditation systems and surveillance systems. Paragraph 16 of the Eden report sets out self-verification schemes in detail. The committee recommended that BS5750 should be followed in quality assurance schemes. We believe that that should be made compulsory in the Bill. The government accepted that proposal in their response to the committee's report.

The Eden committee set out requirements for authorities administering the scheme. Those requirements should be included in the Bill to make it comprehensive. The Bill refers merely to a vague request to comply with requirements.

Mr. Bermingham: Is not the great danger of the Bill the fact that, because it is so short on detail, it is wide in the licence that it gives manufacturers? There cannot be quality control when licence is given to abuse.

Mr. Illsley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, and I hope that we shall return to that issue. Applications for a licence should lay down detailed requirements for manufacturers or, as my hon. Friends have said, the Bill will be a charter for manufacturers to cheat.

The paragraphs in amendment No. 73 reflect the Eden committee's recommendations. The committee envisaged a split system for self-verification schemes, a split between the supervisory role, covering regulations issued by the Secretary of State and accreditation by the NWML and trading standards officers, and the Executive, which would have the job of inspecting the schemes, accrediting those involved and auditing management on a day-to-day basis. The British Standards Institution, because of BS5750 on quality management schemes, would be a prime candidate on the supervisory side, with the NWML and trading standards inspectors carrying out field audits. Alternatively, the National Weights and Measures Laboratory and the National Metrological Co-ordinating Unit might act as supervisors, with the weights and measures laboratory accrediting the firms and manufacturers and the home trading standards officers carrying out audits and imposing sanctions.

The final suggestion involved the establishment of an accreditation board——

Mr. Skinner: Something has just crossed my mind. My hon. Friend has been associated with the mining industry all his life. He may care to draw attention to something that happened when I was a lot younger and when his father worked down the pit. We used to have self-verification machines at the pit, owned by the private coal owners, who weighed their own coal. Under the Bill, those weighing machines could come back. We should then have to do what we did then and employ a check weighman to check the bosses' weighing machines. The bosses ran the tubs of coal over the weighing machines and cheated the miners. We had to pay check weighmen out of our own pockets to stop them doing it.

We have talked about a return to the Victorian era. The Bill might not take us quite as far back as that, but the system extended into the twenties and thirties and right up to nationalisation. The miners had to employ people to check the machines, which were deliberately made to cheat them out of the amount that they were due for the coal that they had produced.

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend has given us a graphic description of the introduction of the check weighman into the coal industry. What he has described is known as tolerance exploitation. Within a given legal tolerance, a weighing machine can be adjusted to give a lesser reading than that which it is prescribed to deliver. Tolerance exploitation is still possible under the law, and one of our fears about the Bill is that tolerance exploitation may be used by repairers or installers—rather than the manufacturers, with whom the clause deals—especially those who have some relationship with the end user of the machine. We hope to come to that in due course.

Mrs. Dunwoody: Does my hon. Friend know that, in a statute of 1335, Edward I made it clear that it was precisely such problems that concerned him? He required that, in the weighing of wool,

"the Tongue of the Balance be even, without bowing to one Side or the other, and without Hand or Foot, or other Touch made thereto."

Is it not clear that nothing changes?

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend is right that nothing changes. As I said earlier, the weights and measures legislation can be traced back to that statute and to the Magna Carta.

Mr. Bermingham: To Roman times.

Mr. Illsley: As my hon. Friend says, it goes back to Roman times. The Bill would severely dent public confidence in weights and measures, which hitherto has enjoyed a high degree of continuity.

A cost would have to be involved—a licensing fee—if, for example, the British Standards Institution were involved, as it would have to cover its costs. The accreditation boards, too, would have to cover their members' expenses. Under the existing arrangements, it is sensible to include and use the existing organisations such as the weights and measures laboratory and the co-ordinating unit. That would make the transition to the new system easier and ensure that we were using known, tried and tested standards.

All the recommendations to which I referred and which are contained in the amendment are set out in paragraph 126 of the Eden report. The Eden committee's recommendation was accepted by the Government, but it was not put into the Bill, and we have no Government legislation to implement it. It is interesting to consider the Government's response. The Eden committee recommended:

"Accreditation to self-verify will depend on the applicant satisfying the Secretary of State about:

(a) quality assurance;

(b) the traceability of testing equipment to national measurement standards;

(c) the procedures for ensuring conformity with an approved pattern;

(d) the adequacy of the testing regime for ensuring that self-verified equipment meets the relevant regulations."

On page 11 of the Government's response, one line stands out and confirms what I have been saying. It reads:

"there is a special opportunity to benefit from inspectors' accumulated experience in the verification of equipment".

Unfortunately, that does not appear in the Bill. The Government recommended British Standard 5750 because they wanted demonstrably high standards. Again, there is a special opportunity to benefit from inspectors. They said that they would encourage schemes based on British Standard 5750. On audits, they said that we need regular assessments plus notification of self-verification equipment for sample checking. That is not included in the Bill. The Government's response to the Eden report went on to state:

"The inspector will have powers to issue instructions to a SVO regarding verification procedures and powers to embargo equipment where the spot checks have revealed an unsatisfactory performance by the SVO."

That is not in the Bill, but it is in the Government's response to the report. The Government should have come forward with comprehensive legislation to cover those points.

Trading standards officers are the weights and measures authority in this aspect of the law, and they should remain so. The amendment should be accepted. If not, the Bill should be withdrawn in favour of a Government Bill.

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-Mare): I declare an interest. I am a consultant to the National Federation of Scale and Weighing Machine Manufacturers. I have never made any secret of the fact that I have brought the Bill forward so that this country should be ahead of its rivals in Europe when self-verification is introduced, willy-nilly, in 1991—whether or not the Bill is passed.

Three hon. Members have tabled amendments. I wrote to all three, inviting them to tell me about their specific complaints and seeking to satisfy them. The hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) replied, but the other two did not. I am sorry about that. The only organisations that have formally come to me have been the Association of County Councils and the Institute of Trading Standards Administration. Both organisations have points to make about my Bill. I met representatives from both organisations, we discussed our views, and amendments to satisfy their requirements were tabled in my name.

The hon. Member for Barnsley, Central is under many serious misapprehensions. Had he given me a chance to explain more fully the circumstances of the Bill he would have understood that, far from encouraging the nefarious activities that he described, it is a small measure which may affect no more than a dozen manufacturers and will free trading standards officers for other duties which they constantly tell us they have no time to pursue. I do not understand why there should be such a wave of opposition to this extremely minor measure.

2.15 pm

Mrs. Dunwoody: As I was one of the hon. Members to whom the hon. Gentleman was kind enough to write, I apologise to him for not having replied. The reason for that is that I was consulting at considerable depth with those who will be most directly affected. When I first put down my carefully considered new clause, it was the hon. Gentleman's intention to pursue the Bill without having consulted me, although he may have consulted other hon. Members. I apologise to the hon. Gentleman if he felt that it was discourteous that there was no official reply to his letter. Had there been considerable consultation with all hon. Members concerned about the Bill, there might have been greater understanding of his position. No one objects to his making his attitude clear, but there are real objections on behalf of the consumers. It is quite wrong to suggest that only the weights and measures officers are involved.

Mr. Wiggin: The hon. Lady knows that those interested in the Bill, including consumers, were represented on the Eden committee, which produced a unanimous report. In the period between publication of the Eden committee report and the Government's response, all interested organisations made their views known. That was why we saw no reason for individual consultation.

Mr. Skinner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Wiggin: No, I will not give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Skinner: I have a letter from the Consumers Association—the publishers of Which?—dated 27 April, which is after all the consultations had taken place. It says:

"Dear Mr. Skinner,

I am writing to draw attention to our misgivings over the 'Weights and Measures (Amendments) Bill', and to request your support in opposing . . . Although this bill appears uncontroversial, it does, in fact, overturn basic measures of consumer protection which have been taken for granted for over 100 years."

I have not been involved with any of the amendments. I just read the letter and thought that the Consumers Association obviously had a case.

Mr. Wiggin: The hon. Gentleman thought wrong. If the Consumers Association had had the courtesy to discuss the matter with me, it would not have written a letter based on so many misapprehensions and misconceptions. It has simply failed to understand what the Bill is about. I was alerted to the fact that the Consumers' Association had made representations to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin), but it did not copy those representations to me, nor did it consult me or ask for an explanation of the intentions of the Bill. If the trading standards officers, who would be freed from their duties by the application of the measure, were to apply themselves to the sort of things that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) was talking about when he referred to cheating in the mines, I believe that it could be argued that this is a consumer protection measure which will improve consumer protection.

It is not fully understood that the licensing agreement from central Government will go only to manufacturers who obtain British Standard 5750.

Ms. Quin: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Wiggin: I will just finish my explanation, as it is important.

The suggestion that any manufacturer who applies will be permitted to stamp his own machines is ludicrous in the extreme. As a promoter of a previous consumer protection Bill, the Hallmarking Act 1973, I can say that the concept that our Government are not completely alert to the necessity to ensure that these things are done properly—they have been done properly in this country for many hundreds of years—is ludicrous. We are talking about technically difficult matters. Obtaining British Standard 5750 is not only a lengthy process, but an extremely expensive one involving staff at all levels in the company—from the managing director down to the chap who sweeps the floor. Few people will be able to afford or will take the trouble to obtain BS 5750. We believe that at present perhaps a dozen manufacturers in this country will be able to take advantage of the legislation.

Mr. Bermingham: Is the hon. Gentleman not saying that those who are in the club can therefore benefit from the club, and that that will exclude all the other manufacturers? What about companies which are beginning to develop in this sector? Unless they are part of that little group, they appear to be excluded.

Mr. Wiggin: They will go on in exactly the same manner as now and a trading standards officer will visit them and stamp their machines as and when required.

Ms. Quin: The hon. Gentleman refers to the fact that the Consumers Association has written to me as well as to other hon. Members outlining its objections to the Bill. Does he agree that as he knew that the Consumers Association was party to the widespread agreement to the Eden committee recommendations it would have been better to consult that association before putting pen to paper to devise his Bill? Does he also agree that instead of his being placed in this difficult position it would have been much better if the Government had brought forward a measure which incorporated the Eden recommendations and therefore satisfied all parties?

Mr. Wiggin: I had assumed, with good reason, that as a result of its presence on the Eden committee and its constant communications with the Government on that matter subsequently, there was no reason to believe that the Consumers Association, of all people, would be disturbed by the Bill. Its relevance to the consumer is remote.

The young man at the Consumers Association whom I telephoned on hearing of his concern said that he would write to me that very day. The letter was delivered on Wednesday night, but I cannot carry out negotiations on such a complex matter in 24 hours. He will receive a detailed critique of all his detailed points, but there is no substance in them and the consumer has nothing to fear from the Bill. It is a thin argument to suggest that manufacturers' costs may be modestly affected and that, therefore, the costs of weighing machines may be passed on to the public. The consumer has nothing to fear from the Bill. The application of trading standards will continue as before. It is the manufacture and, perhaps, the subsequent installation and repair of weighing machines that is involved. This Bill is not about the checking of weighing machines. No one is suggesting that there should be any change in current arrangements for that.

The substance of the Opposition's objections to the Bill was revealed by the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central, who said that they were very annoyed that they had got only a slice of the cake and that they would not allow the Bill to pass because they wanted the whole cake.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister because the Bill would give us a substantial lead over other European countries in subsequent negotiations. Obviously the necessary expertise is being applied to advise authorities in Brussels of the likely outcome of events. By stopping the Bill, the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central is simply allowing the French and the Germans to take a lead in a matter in which we are perfectly able to take the lead.

Mr. Illsley: The hon. Gentleman says that we could steal a march on the Europeans if the Bill were passed. If the Government had activated the Eden committee report in 1986 when they accepted its recommendations, we should have gained a further three years on the Europeans.

Mr. Wiggin: I cannot argue about the desirability of bringing forward a Bill covering all the Eden recommendations, especially as it would contain the measures proposed in the Bill before us.

I have a letter to the Scottish local authorities from my hon. Friend the Minister in which he makes clear the Government's intention to bring forward a Bill. We all know that the timetable in this place is already full and my hon. Friend the Minister was unable to argue that this matter was of sufficient priority for the Government to produce a Bill. The failure to produce such a Bill is a poor reason for opposing my measure, which is simply part of that measure. The argument that a Bill covering all the Eden recommendations has not been introduced is not a good basis for opposition. In the light of that explanation, I should have thought that the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central would think carefully about the substance of his complaint.

My amendments have been tabled at the request of the Association of County Councils. I believe that it is perfectly reasonable that the local trading standards office should be consulted before a licence is issued. The suggestion that the scheme should not be administered nationally shows that the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central does not understand how the administration of weights and measures is conducted. Trading standards offices receive, at regular intervals, central guidance notes from the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, which is held in the highest esteem by all concerned.

Nowadays, we deal in high technology. The old weighing machine with a weight on one side and the item to be weighed on the other has gone. We now have sophisticated electronic instruments. The concept of a trading standards officer even understanding their operation let alone the adjustment of them, is clearly completely out of date. It is because the manufacturers are the best people for that job that the Bill suggests that they should be allowed to mark the machines on their own premises. Once that machine comes out of the factory, there is nothing to stop the trading standards officer putting his measured weight on it to check its accuracy. The checks and duties of the trading standards officer, as carried out today, will continue. I do not believe that the Consumers Association or any other organisation can suggest that the consumers' interests will be affected in any way. The present arrangements simply allow the trading standards officer's inspection to become the final inspection within the factory process. That is deeply unsatisfactory.

If any Opposition Member wishes to have a full explanation of the motives and merits of the Bill, and to discuss any fears that he or she might have about it, I am ready and available to do so. I am deeply sorry that I have not been given the opportunity to do so before.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Eric Forth): With the permission of the Committee, I shall take this opportunity, although time is running out, to set out the background. Questions have been raised about the Government's position, and it will help hon. Members if I set it out briefly.

Hon. Members will be aware that the Eden committee was asked by the Government to review the arrangements for the legal control of measuring equipment in use for trade. One of the key recommendations of the committee, which included representatives from consumer bodies, and, as has been said, trading standards interests and equipment manufacturers, was that a self-verification scheme should be introduced. This scheme would allow properly accredited manufacturers, installers and repairers of trade equipment to verify and stamp equipment which had been shown to meet legal requirements, rather than requiring a trading standards officer to fulfil the task.

In accepting that recommendation in its published response, the Government fully endorsed the committee's commitment to ensuring that the public's confidence in fair trading should be maintained. To this end, the scheme would be available only to those companies accredited against stringent quality assurance criteria, and the expertise of the local authorities' trading standards officers would be used in the accreditation and auditing of the scheme. Therefore, there is no reason to believe that there would be any compromise of consumer protection. My hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) has introduced this Bill which seeks to amend the Weights and Measures Act 1985 so that a self-verification scheme could be introduced. The measures proposed in the Bill are consistent with those outlined in Cmnd. 9850 for the introduction of a self-verification scheme, and therefore the Bill has Government support. Similarly, the amendments tabled in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare have sought to meet the quite proper concerns of trading standards officers and consumer interests and, therefore, should receive hon. Members' support.

As the Eden committee recognised, the technical complexity of weighing and measuring equipment increases inexorably—a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare—and self verification, properly based on sound quality assurance principles, is the way forward. Other countries have already introduced schemes of this kind and we can certainly expect the impending Community directives on measuring instruments to include provisions for self verification. The United Kingdom rightly has an international reputation for the effectiveness of its weights and measures controls, and also for pioneering work on quality assurance certification. We want to take this opportunity to introduce a national self verification scheme and maintain our position in Europe as enlightened regulators for the benefit of manufacturers, consumers and the enforcement authorities.

I shall state the Government's position on the amendments as they arise.

Mr. Bermingham: I am always worried when a promoter of a Bill says that it is promoted in the interests of that section of the community who will be able to verify its own interests. Unless someone, who may be a manufacturer, is one of that group, he or she will still be subject to the same British Standard 5750 and cannot be part of the club.

I am even more concerned that a Minister should come to the Dispatch Box and agree that the Government had read the committee's report and accepted all its recommendations but will choose to implement just a few of them because that might help us in Europe.

I am even more concerned when the Bill's promoter says that trading standards officers should not be involved because they do not have the technical expertise to deal with these matters. That is not right or proper. I expect the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) to withdraw that comment; it was a nasty slur that was unworthy of him.

Trading standard officers in St. Helens have expressed grave concerns to me about the Bill——

It being half-past Two o'clock, THE CHAIRMAN left the Chair to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

India and Nepal (Aid)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Alan Howarth.]

2.33 pm

Mr. Neil Thorne (Ilford, South): We have had a long association and friendship with both India and Nepal, which has been in two directions. We have provided aid to India which, over the past eight years, has totalled no less than £910 million. That works out at an average of £113·75 million per year. The figures vary from year to year because the agreed projects that are taken up are not even in number throughout the years and in some years the take-up is greater than in others. That is why we must look at this in averages.

During that period we have had a major hand in helping the Rihand coal-fired power station with £117 million, the Bharat Aluminium Company thermal power plant with £131 million; £24 million has been provided for low-cost housing; £15 million for social forestry projects in Karnataka; £31 million for long-wall mining technology; and £24 million has been provided for the Indo-British fertiliser education project. All are important aspects of aid which can be expected to continue in the future. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will say more about that later.

During a similar period, Nepal has received just over £70 million. That works out at an average of £8·75 million per year. It has contributed to the Dharan-Dhanjuta road in east Nepal and has provided help with the tea industry, with rural development in the Kosi hills, with grain storage, with an earth satellite station and—most important—reafforestation in the middle hills. With Nepal's increasing population, there is a problem about obtaining fuel and large amounts of forest have been denuded. That is bad for the soil, which is then washed away down the mountains by the rivers, making it difficult to work the remaining farms properly and effectively. Therefore, reafforestation is important.

In the past, the attitude behind our aid has been to help to renew those natural resources that can be renewed, to provide effective communications, to provide health care —including, of course, an improved water supply—and especially, to help with education and training. In return, we have been able to export a considerable amount of goods to India. In 1983 we exported no less than £805 million worth of goods to India. That has risen steadily until in 1988 the estimated figure was £1,112 million.

The Nepalese have a special relationship with this country. I need hardly remind the House that it goes back a long way. For 173 years Nepal has been providing us with soldiers for the British Army and for the Indian army when it was under British control. The Nepalese will provide an effective service to the British Crown for many years to come because we are experiencing the problems of the demographic trough, which means that the number of service personnel in the British Army in the next 20 years is likely to be much lower than in the past, especially in infantry regiments. That means that we shall be relying even more on the Nepalese Gurkhas to help us with our defence commitments.

I was sorry that we were unable to help more in providing for the future of the station of Dharan. My hon. Friend knows my feelings about this. I wish that we had managed to retain it permanently because once one recruits to a particular area and provides a valuable service in terms of a hospital and medical treatment, one finds that service people tend to retire to such areas.

The value of the properties and the number built in that area depend upon the presence of a facility at Dharan. About 18 months ago the Government decided to close that, and it is now in the process of being wound down. That is unfortunate because it made a major and significant contribution to the economy in that part of Nepal.

The King of Nepal, His Majesty King Birendra, is a conscientious monarch and spends at least two months of every year visiting his people in the hills. I have personal experience of that. It is a wonderful thing to do and says a great deal for the king's dedication and his keenness and enthusiasm. He finds out a good deal about his people and his experience of their trials and tribulations and finds out where they most need help. That means that he is in a good position to see exactly where there are problems and where some assistance is required.

It came as a great disappointment to many hon. Members to learn about a breakdown in the trade and transit arrangements between these two friends of ours. Nepal is a land-locked country. It has China through Tibet on the northern border, which has two very difficult passes, and on the southern, eastern and western borders it has India. Until recently, as a result of a treaty which came into effect in 1978, there were no fewer than 15 crossing points for trade and transit, but that treaty came to an end about 12 months ago. Two extensions of six months were granted but then, at short notice, the agreement was terminated. Considerable difficulty is now being experienced in getting goods across the border because only two crossing points remain open. They are probably the most important of the crossing points and are at Raxaul and Jogbani. The end of the agreement has caused severe restriction and great difficulty for this land-locked country.

No fewer than 90 hon. Members have signed an early-day motion drawing attention to their concern about this situation. Quite clearly we must all be concerned because we are providing aid to two countries which are not trading freely or having free transit between one another. Much of the aid, especially to the smaller country, is dissipated in extra expense because of the closing of the border in so many areas. Civil servants in Delhi have said that the majority of essential materials are passing across the frontier despite the restrictions introduced in March, but that has not been found to be so by some people. I had a letter only yesterday from a constitutent whose son is working on behalf of the CARE charity in Nepal. His efforts are being severely restricted because he is unable to get petrol to move about the country to provide the important help that is required. He has told his mother that paraffin for cooking and sugar and soap are not easily available, that petrol is severely rationed and that medicines and hospital supplies are in short supply. This is a most serious matter when one is trying to help some of the poorest people in the world and also to ensure that the money spent by the British taxpayer in providing afforestation projects is not undermined by the wood being cut down to provide heat for cooking, necessary though that purpose is. Much of the money that the British taxpayer is paying for reafforestation, particularly in the middle hills of Nepal, is likely to be wasted if the situation that I have described continues for much longer.

I understand that Mr. Rajiv Gandhi is keen that the matter should be solved as quickly as possible. Of course, sometimes civil servants have a way of holding things up. My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will know that not so long ago I had to deal with the question of some gold taken off a plane in Calcutta when it was being transported back legally from Hong Kong to Nepal by Gurkha servicemen to purchase land. Such a technical holdup may go on for months or even years while lawyers do their best to unravel the problems.

That kind of situation cannot be allowed to make life so difficult for people in parts of the world such as India and Nepal. There are good reasons why the two countries should have a very harmonious relationship in transit and trade. India is the largest democracy in the world, and Nepal relies on its goods transiting through India. In fact, 90 per cent. of Nepal's trade is with India. Thus, the two countries have a very close-knit involvement. At the same time they are entirely independent and sovereign states, and, as such, should be able to expect their goods to be allowed to be transmitted through adjoining countries without unnecessary let or hindrance.

Many agreements previously entered into, some of which extend until 1991, have had to be suspended because of this embargo. Diesel fuel, paraffin for cooking, baby food, medical supplies and salt are some of the products affected. Clearly, we must show concern about the situation. Coal is also important. Recently, 2,000 tonnes of coal has been released by India, but that is only a small proportion of the 1988 quota of 80,000 tonnes still due. The Nepalese cement industry, which relies on coal from India, is now in a desperate situation. Although Nepal entered into a contract with the Salt Corporation of India for the supply of salt until 1991, inadequate supplies of salt are being allowed into Nepal. Customs duty of about 145 per cent. is being imposed on Nepalese exports to India, leading to a virtual stoppage. That, too, is a serious matter.

Any reasonable person would be concerned about the matters that I have raised. While Mr. Rajiv Gandhi knows about the situation, I do not think he really appreciates its extent, because I am sure that if he did he would take urgent action to put it right. In the interests of the three countries concerned—India, Nepal and the United Kingdom—I hope the problem can be solved urgently. It affects the British taxpayer for the reasons that I have explained to my hon. Friend the Minister. I trust that it will be possible to unravel this matter very soon so that the trade and transit arrangements can be allowed to continue.

I should have thought that in the short term it would be sensible to allow the previous arrangements to continue for a further 12 months and in the meantime to come to a permanent arrangement for the two separate issues—trade and transit. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to do everything possible to ensure that the matter is resolved to everyone's honour and satisfaction.

2.50 pm

Mr. John Wheeler (Westminster, North): My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) has kindly agreed that I should speak for a moment or two in support of his excellent speech. He brings to the House a special knowledge of the kingdom of Nepal and its relationship with India because he is the chairman of the all-party Nepalese group and a distinguished member of the Select Committee on Defence, and he has a special knowledge of the Gurkhas.

This is a serious matter. There is widespread support for my hon. Friend's points inside the House and in the country. The United Kingdom has had a special relationship with the kingdom of Nepal since 1815. Many of the Nepalese nationals have served in Her Majesty's forces and continue to do so. Several hundreds, if not thousands, of residents in Nepal receive pensions from the United Kingdom Government for their service. Many of them are suffering hardship as a result of the expiry of the treaties and the failure to find a solution of the problem between India and Nepal.

We all know that the United Kingdom has an excellent relationship with India. We are the firmest of friends with that great country and recognise its contribution to the work of the Commonwealth and the democratic principle. It is especially sad that the present situation should have arisen between two countries with which the United Kingdom has a special regard and affection.

It will not do for the Foreign Office to sit on the fence as the Minister of State, Lord Glenarthur, implies in correspondence to me. He observed that he hopes that the issue will be settled and that the Foreign Office will "continue to follow events with keen attention."

It will not do simply to be an observer of events. We have an interest and a concern. We must ask the Government to use their best influence with our friends in New Delhi and on behalf of the kingdom of Nepal to ensure that there is a solution in that part of the world for which we have a special regard and an historical link.

3.52 pm

The Minister for Overseas Development (Mr. Christopher Patten): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) for giving us this opportunity to discuss the problems and challenges of development in south Asia. My hon. Friend is an acknowledged authority on Nepal and no one has done more to strengthen the good relations between the kingdom of Nepal and this country. I am also grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) for contributing to the debate. Any contribution which my hon. Friend makes in the House is stamped with his considerable common sense.

I am aware of the strong views of hon. Members on this subject, as is my noble Friend, Lord Glenarthur, the Minster of State to whose correspondence my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North referred. The strong views expressed in this debate and in other ways will be noted beyond the House.

I want to begin by referring to the aid and development issues raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South. On the face of it, there may appear a sharp contrast between Nepal, on the one hand, a small mountainous kingdom and still very largely an agrarian society, and, on the other, India, the second most populous country in the world with a large and growing industrial sector. In fact, their similarities are more significant than their differences. They both face the same basic challenge which is to raise the standard of living of their peoples, the majority of whom live in absolute poverty or close to it. Our aid programmes to both countries—the subject of the debate—are aimed at assisting them with that challenge.

Nepal has only opened itself up to international trade and aid, and to all the influences that go with them, in the past 25 years. It is all the more encouraging that it has chosen to follow the path of economic rectitude and has adopted a structural adjustment programme under the aegis of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. It has followed that programme with considerable commitment and success. I commend the admirable progress made by the Nepal Government in the past few months.

During my visit to Nepal in March 1988—which was a particularly enjoyable as well as useful visit—I was pleased to be able to offer British support for is programme in the form of a pledge of programme aid worth £5 million. I also pledged £10 million of aid to Nepal's major hydro-electric development at Arun. That and other hydro-electric proposals lie at the heart of Nepal's development prospects. They offer the possibility of a massive jump in gross national product in the next decade or two—some reports say, as much as 25 per cent. The only market for power on that scale is India, which has its own implications for the future.

To put massive development of that kind into place, Nepal must first develop its basic infrastructure. The backbone of its transport and communications is the road system. That is an area in which we made a major investment through the aid programme—difficult though that can be—and we plan to continue doing so in future, in close collaboration with the Swiss aid programme. The Swiss have slightly more experience of road building in mountains than ourselves. Our aim is not only to develop, repair and maintain Nepal's road system but to strengthen the country's own capacity to undertake those tasks.

That kind of institutional strengthening also lies behind our support for the Nepal Administrative Staff College, which trains Government officials in Nepal, and our close links with Budhanilkantha school, from which Nepal's future generations of leaders in government and industry will come. I paid a particularly interesting visit to that school and was very impressed both by the quality of education provided and by the spirit of community that one felt there.

Earlier I mentioned the major challenge faced by India and Nepal of alleviating poverty. It is entirely appropriate that His Majesty the King of Nepal pledged his Government to meet the basic needs of his people by the year 2000. That is an ambitious target. As one would expect of a very poor country, all the social indicators look grim. Levels of literacy are very low by south Asian standards, infant and maternal mortality is very high, and the population growth rate is alarming—especially given the rapid degeneration of the physical environment.

Nowhere are those problems more acute than in the hills. In our long-standing project on the Kosi hills we have assisted the local inhabitants in tackling those problems in an integrated fashion, with a special emphasis on forestry, agriculture and water supply. I should like more time to speak about forestry, which, as my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South said, is an extremely important subject. Alas, I must move on.

We agreed with the Government of Nepal that we should assist also in developing a system of primary health care that will reach out to the people in the eastern hills and provide them with the basic health services that they so urgently need. I cannot pass over the question of health without mentioning the British military hospital at

[Mr. Christopher Patten]

Dharan, which was considered in the recent interesting report of the Defence Committee on the future of the brigade of Gurkhas. I do not wish to anticipate the Government's response to that report, but, as my hon. Friend will know from our evidence to that Committee, we propose to provide a package of £3 million of aid to assist in the conversion of that hospital to civilian use and to maintain the standards of care at that hospital for the benefit of the people in the eastern hills.

It will be clear from my comments that we have an expanding aid programme in Nepal. We expect that our aid disbursements for this financial year will be about 50 per cent. higher than they were two years ago—£14 million compared with £9 million. This programme reflects the long friendship between our countries, which has been exemplified by the brave and committed service of the brigade of Gurkhas, in peace and in war.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South referred to our aid programme in India. It reflects our historic connections with India and the considerable poverty and needs faced by India. More people live in absolute poverty in India than in the whole of Latin America. Over the years, we have found that we are capable of running in partnership with the Indian authorities especially valuable and effective projects. We are trying to help in the power, railways, agriculture and social sectors. I have been particularly impressed by projects which I have seen which attempt to alleviate poverty directly and improve education standards—for example, the work that we are doing in Visak and Hyderabad on slum improvement and on the primary education project in Andhra Pradesh. That is a good programme, and I hope that we continue to apply aid effectively in India.

I turn to the kernal of the argument put by my hon. Friends. They referred to the current state of bilateral relations between India and Nepal and to the dispute which has arisen between them which concerns arrangements for trade, transit and similar matters. The Government greatly value the rich and diverse web of links which bind Britain to Nepal and to India and which are firmly rooted in tradition and history. I know the importance attached by hon. Members and people in the country to sustaining and developing those links. My hon. Friends have referred to that point in relation to Nepal and India. That is certainly the Government's aim.

It is naturally of considerable concern and regret to us that a dispute should have arisen between two countries with which we enjoy close and friendly relations. I well understand and appreciate the feeling in the House over recent developments. I share hon. Members hope that the dispute will not be damaging to the people of Nepal or India or have any lasting impact on their economic development.

We have followed events with keen attention from the outset and will continue to do so. The World bank is evaluating the effects of the dispute and is co-ordinating with donors. There is no sign as yet that special measures are necessary. We shall consider any well-founded requests as sympathetically as we always do, but we look forward to the resolution of the dispute before that stage is reached. We very much hope that India and Nepal, as sovereign and independent countries, will soon resolve their differences in a way satisfactory to both and so bring the dispute to an end. I wish them every success in doing so. In this connection, it is encouraging that both sides are reportedly willing to hold bilateral discussions to bring about a resolution of the problem. My hon. Friends have set out their argument eloquently and potently and made clear their considerable anxiety about the dispute. I shall ensure that their views, including those of my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North on my noble Friend's correspondence, are drawn to the attention of Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office who, I am sure, will read the report of the debate with interest and concern.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes past Three o'clock.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will use the powers available to him under the Regulation of Railways Act to require British Rail to supply him with regular returns of working hourse of (a) drivers, (b) signalmen and (c) other staff.

Mr. Portillo: There is no requirement in legislation for the British Railways Board to provide the Secretary of State with regular returns of working hours. The Transport Act 1962 places upon the board a duty to provide railway services having due regard to efficiency, economy and safety of operation. The question of working hours is therefore a matter of management for the board.

BR Services (Manchester-Stockport)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had any approach from British Railways to withdraw its passenger service from Manchester Victoria to Stockport via Miles Platting, Denton and Reddish, south; and whether such a service will be maintained after 15 May.

Mr. Portillo: We have received no such proposal. The timetabling and routing of services are entirely a matter for the board.

Road Traffic Growth

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was his Department's forecast rate of road traffic growth and the actual rate for each of the last five years;

(2) what is the Department's current forecast rate of road traffic growth for each of the next three years;

(3) what percentage increase in road traffic is anticipated by the year 1999.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's estimates of traffic growth compared with actual growth are as follows for the years requested:

Growth (per cent.)

Year	Low	High	Actual
1984	1·9	3·3	4·5
1985	1·7	3·2	3·1
1986	1·6	3·1	6·1
1987	1·5	3·0	5·6
1988	1·6	2·9	5·2

The forecasts for annual traffic growth for the next three years are as follows:

Annual growth (per cent.)

Year	Low	High
1989	1·16	2·49
1990	1·15	2·50
1991	1·07	2·18

The increase in road traffic from 1988 to 1999 is forecast to be between 10 and 22·5 per cent.

The Department's forecasts are for long-term traffic growth. They are not intended to provide accurate forecasts for individual years or short periods.

The forecasts of growth are presented as a range to reflect uncertainty about growth in factors underlying traffic growth, such as GDP and fuel prices. They are based on the forecasts given in "National Road Traffic Forecasts 1984" issued by the Department in March 1985. The forecasts are for all motor traffic excluding motor cycles.

Road Building (White Paper)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his White Paper on the future road building programme for Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the late spring or summer.

Motorways (Speed Limit)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is taken to record systematically vehicle speeds on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Automatic traffic counters, which also measure vehicle speeds, are being installed at 25 motorway sites. At present, speed data are being obtained from two of these sites; another eight should be supplying data by the end of the year, with the remaining 15 becoming operational in 1990.

These data will enable vehicle speeds, and trends in vehicle speeds, to be analysed by type of vehicle and time of day. It is unlikely that it will be possible to do such analyses until mid-1990 because of the need to have a sufficient number of sites supplying reliable, consistent, data.

Road Building

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the national road building programme in East Sussex for 1988-89 and for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure on national trunk road programme schemes in East Sussex is as follows:

[1] (estimated).

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress of the current road building programme in the north west.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Five major motorway and trunk road construction contracts are currently under way. The total works value is around £80 million. Work continues on other improvements and maintenance of the network.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce early conditional acceptance in the Cleveland TPP bid of the Stockton south spine road; and when commencement of the project will occur.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All local highway authorities have been invited to submit bids by 31 July for transport supplementary grant for 1990-91. Decisions on the allocation of resources will be announced later in the year. The programme for construction of this scheme is a matter for Cleveland county council.

Railways

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the options being considered for the future operation and management of British Rail; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to set up a national track authority to lease track time to competing companies on a national or regional basis; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has any plans to re-introduce regional railway companies to operate a full range of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am considering the long-term options for British Rail including privatisation. The possibilities for privatisation include: a single privatised company to run the entire network; a division into several independent companies based on British Rail's business sectors; a division into a number of independent regional companies; a vertically separated railway industry with track owned by a track authority on which independent companies would run services; or a combination of these. We are not yet in a position to take decisions.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the building of the second Severn crossing is dependent upon assessment of future traffic flows.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The decision to build the second Severn crossing has already been taken.

A50

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions he has reached about the proposed changes in the A50 road through Stoke-on-Trent; and if a date has been arranged for the consequent inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Final design is being undertaken to enable publication of the complete package of draft statutory orders in November this year. Arrangements for an inquiry cannot be made until objections are known. If one is necessary for this scheme we would expect it to take place in the spring of 1990.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there have been any recent developments in regard to new routes from the United States to Manchester airport; if he expects any further developments in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government have continued to press the United States authorities to agree a reasonable exchange of rights to enable new routes to be established between the United States and Manchester airport. The United States has been considering an offer we made earlier in the year and has recently promised revised and comprehensive counter-proposals.

King's Cross Fire (Inquiry)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the King's Cross public inquiry; and which parties appearing before the inquiry received reimbursement of legal costs.

Mr. Portillo: The cost to the Department of the King's Cross investigation, excluding staff costs, was about £1·2 million. The Department does not have information on the costs incurred by others. My right hon. Friend made it clear to the House on 10 November that he had accepted in full Mr. Fennell's recommendations about the award of costs to represented parties as set out in paragraphs 4-8 of chapter 21 of his report; claims are being settled on that basis.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 6 and 7 respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers and proportion of women at 1 September 1988 were:

		Percentage
Grades 1 to 5	22	15
Grade 6	104	25
Grade 7	36	26
Overall	162	23

We do not hold information on the ethnic origin of all our staff but of those who have responded to the ethnic monitoring survey, those from ethnic minorities were:

	Number
Grades 1 to 7	[1]10

[1] 1·7 per cent. of respondents in those grades.

The survey was conducted on the undertaking that anonymity would be preserved. Any further breakdown of the figures could identify individuals and cannot therefore be provided.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A survey of all the Department's employees was carried out in 1986 since when all new recruits have been asked to complete an ethnic monitoring questionnaire on a voluntary basis. We are proposing to conduct another survey later in the year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: Recruitment of grades above administrative officer is carried out by the Civil Service Commission.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) universities and (c) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of Education and Science purchased nine vehicles in 1988 at a total cost of £48,041·45. I am unable to confirm that these vehicles were United Kingdom-produced, on the definition employed by the DTI for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value, but they are all of EC origin. The information sought regarding the universities and other public sector agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible is not held centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated number of settlers from Turkey, who are now living in the occupied area of northern Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: I told the House on 10 June 1988, at column 696, in answer to a question from the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor), that we estimated that there were then about 35,000 non-Cypriot settlers in northern Cyprus. We have no evidence to suggest there has been any change in the meantime.

British Citizens (Thailand)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, 28 November, Official Report, columns 107-8, what representations he has made to the Thai authorities regarding British citizens imprisoned there, in particular in respect of those held in chains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: When British prisoners have been shackled in circumstances not covered by normal Thai practice, Her Majesty's embassy at Bangkok have made effective representations and the chains have been removed.

Her Majesty's embassy continue closely to monitor conditions under which British prisoners are held, to ensure that these are no worse than those applied to Thai or other prisoners.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made about the treatment of Edward Heaton-Smith, presently held in Phitsanalok prison, Thailand; what information he has about the conditions in which he is held, particularly with regard to his continuing isolation from other foreign nationals, the duration of his being shackled in leg-irons and his ill-treatment at the hands of the prison authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Representations made to the Thai authorities by Her Majesty's Embassy at Bangkok have met with the following responses:

(a) Leg-irons are worn by all new arrivals at a prison. Their release is conditional on the prisoner satisfying the prison authorities as to his conduct. Mr. Heaton-Smith has not met the latter criterion;

(b) a report on the alleged ill-treatment is awaited from the prison governor;

(c) Mr. Heaton-Smith will be transferred to Klong Prem prison, where there are British prisoners; but he first has a charge to face in Phitsanulock.

The British Consul visited Mr. Heaton-Smith on 16 March 1989, when he showed no signs of malnutrition or abuse.

Soviet Trade Inspectors

Mr. D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Soviet trade inspectors there are in the United Kingdom monitoring the manufacture by British companies of goods and equipment to be delivered to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under export contracts; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures for the number of Soviet trade inspectors resident in the United Kingdom over the last four years are as follows:

	Number
1986	20
1987	17
1989	27

Records of previous years were not kept in the same way, and comparable figures prior to 1986 are therefore not available.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Bhutan, (b) Brunei, (c) Burma, (d) China, (e) Taiwan, (f) Hong Kong, (g) India, (h) Indonesia, (i) Iran, (j) Iraq, (k) Israel, (l) Japan, (m) Jordan, (n) Kampuchea, (o) North Korea, (p) South Korea, (q) Kuwait, (r) Laos, (s) Lebanon, (t) Macao, (u) Mongolia, (v) Maldives and (w) Malaysia; and which organisations made these representations;

(2) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Nicaragua (b) the Netherlands Antilles, (c) St. Vincent and the Grenadines, (d) El Salvador, (e) Trinidad and Tobago, (f) Turks and Caicos Islands, (g) the British Virgin Islands, (h) the United States Virgin Islands, (i) Argentina, (j) Bolivia, (k) Brazil, (l) Chile, (m) Colombia, (n) Ecudaor, (o) French Guiana, (p) Guyana,

(q) Paraguay, (r) Peru, (s) Surinam, (t) Uruguay, (u) Venezuela, (v) South Georgia, (w) Falklands Islands, (x) Afghanistan, (y) Bahrain and (z) Bangladesh; and which organisations made these representations;

(3) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) France, (b) East Germany, (c) West Germany, (d) Gibraltar, (e) Antigua and Barbuda, (f) Bahamas, (g) Barbados, (h) Belize, (i) Bermuda, (j) Cayman Islands, (k) Costa Rica, (l) Cuba, (m) Dominica, (n) the Dominican Republic, (o) Grenada, (p) Guadeloupe, (q) Guatemala, (r) Haiti, (s) Honduras, (t) Jamacia, (u) Martinique, (v) Montserrat, (w) St. Lucia, (x) St. Christopher and Nevis, (y) Puerto Rico and (z) Panama; and which organisations made these representations;

(4) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Nepal, (b) Oman, (c) Pakistan, (d) Philippines, (e) Qatar, (f) Saudi Arabia, (g) Singapore, (h) Sri Lanka, (i) Syria, (j) Thailand, (k) Turkey, (l) the Asian Republics of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, (m) United Arab Emirates, (n) Vietnam, (o) North Yemen, (p) South Yemen, (q) Albania, (r) Andorra, (s) Austria, (t) Belgium, (u) Bulgaria, (v) Cyprus, (w) Czechoslovakia, (x) Denmark, (y) Faroe Islands and (z) Finland; and which organisations made those representations;

(5) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Yugoslavia, (b) Australia, (c) Norfolk Islands, (d) Fiji, (e) French Polynesia, (f) Guam, (g) Kiribati, (h) Marshall Islands, (i) Micronesia, (j) Nauru, (k) New Caledonia, (l) New Zealand, (m) Cook Islands, (n) Nive, (o) Ross Dependency, (p) Northern Mariana Islands, (q) Palau, (r) Papua New Guinea, (s) Pitcairn Islands, (t) Eastern Samoa, (u) Western Samoa, (v) Soloman Islands, (w) Tonga, (x) Tuvalu, (y) Vanuatu and (z) Wallis and Fortuna Islands; and which organisations made those representations;

(6) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Senegal, (b) Seychelles, (c) Sierra Leone, (d) Somalia, (e) South Africa, (f) the Republic of Ireland, (g) Iceland, (h) Hungary, (i) Greece, (j) Italy, (k) Liechtenstein, (l) Luxembourg, (m) Malta and Gozo, (n) Monaco, (o) the Netherlands, (p) Norway, (q) Poland, (r) Portugal, (s) Romania, (t) San Marino, (u) Spain, (v) Sweden, (w) Switzerland, (x) Turkey, (y) European Russia and (z) the Vatican City State; and which organisations made those representations;

(7) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Cote d'Ivoire, (b) Djibouti, (c) Egypt, (d) Guinea, (e) Ethiopia, (f) Gabon, (g) Gambia, (h) Ghana, (i) Guinea-Bissau, (j) Kenya, (k) Lesotho, (l) Liberia, (m) Libya, (n) Madagascar, (o) Malawi, (p) Mali, (q) Mauritania, (q) Mauritius, (s) Mayotte, (t) Morocco, (u) Mozambique, (v) Namibia, (w) Niger, (x) Nigeria, (y) Rwanda and (z) St. Helena; and which organisations made those representations;

(8) how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in (a) Sudan, (b) Swaziland, (c) Tanzania, (d) Togo, (e) Tunisia, (f) Uganda, (g) Zaire, (h) Zambia, (i) Zimbabwe, (j) Canada, (k) Greenland, (l) Mexico, (m) United States, (n) Anguilla, (o) Algeria, (p) Angola, (q) Benin, (r) Botswana, (s) Burkina Faso, (t) Burundi, (u) Cameroon, (v) Cape Verde Islands, (w) the Central African Republic, (x) Chad, (y) Comoros and (z) Congo; and which organisations made those representations.

Mr. Eggar: We receive representations on a wide range of countries from many organisations and individuals. The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in Aruba; and which organisations made those representations.

Mr. Eggar: We have checked our records for the last three years. In that time we have received no representations about the denial of human rights and the use of torture in Aruba.

Laos

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the President of the Soviet Union and other Soviet authorities regarding the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Laos and the present whereabouts of the former Laotian King Savang Vatthana and Crown Prince Vong Savang; what information he has of the whereabouts of the former Laotian Chief of Staff, General Phasouk S. Ratsphak; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not discussed the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Laos or the whereabouts of the former King and Crown Prince of Laos with the Soviet authorities, at least in recent years. We have no knowledge of General Phasoul S. Ratsphak.

Gibraltar

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, Official Report, 29 November 1988, column 185, what response he has had from the Gibraltar authorities in respect of amending their law on consensual homosexual acts between males.

Mrs. Chalker: The Gibraltar Attorney General has prepared a Bill amending the law on consensual homosexual acts between males to conform with article 8 of the European convention on human rights. We understand that the Bill will shortly be submitted to the Council of Ministers for introduction in the Gibraltar House of Assembly.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many vehicles, and of what value, were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agenices for which he is responsible in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office bought 240 vehicles at a cost of £3,089,600 in 1988. Other public sector agencies for which the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has responsibility, purchased 32 vehicles at a cost of £275,000.

Most popular models of vehicle produced by the multinational manufacturers are built in the United Kingdom and other European countries. Using the definition employed by the DTI for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-work value, it is not possible to determine how many were United Kingdom-produced without individual inspection of each vehicle. Vehicles purchased by the FCO are considered British if they have been bought in the United Kingdom from a British manufacturer. On this basis, 176 vehicles were British.

In the same period, the Overseas Development Administration purchased 371 vehicles costing £3,785,000 and their public sector agencies nine vehicles costing £98,500. Of these, 372 were British.

Rain Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a video copy of the "Horizon" programme on BBC2 on 10 April on the consequences to the Panama Canal of destruction of the central American forest.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office library does not normally stock audiovisual material or transcripts of television programmes. We are, however, fully aware of the contents of the programme concerned.

Ethiopia

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the affadavit sworn by Ms. Jennie Street in Khartoum dated 12 February concering the use of napalm by the Ethiopian armed forces in Eritrea; and whether he will condemn its use against the civilian population of both Eritrea and Tigré.

Mrs. Chalker: We have a copy of this affidavit. While we have no means of verifying the allegations it contains, the frequency, and gravity, of such reports is cause for concern. We have made this known to Ethiopian authorities and raised the matter at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva.

ICAO Meetings

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of a report together with the findings of the meeting held under ICAO auspices from 6 to 10 March of international experts.

Mr. Waldegrave: The ICAO report of this meeting has not been published. For reasons that the House will appreciate, it is preferable that details of this work should not become publicly known.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will (a) place in the Library or (b) circulate in the Official Report, the names of those attending on behalf of the United Kingdom, the meetings from 6 to 10 March, held under ICAO auspices.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not the custom to name officials engaged in Government business. It would be particularly inappropriate to name those who are involved with this important and often sensitive work.

Semtex

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and where he expects the international convention on the subject of Semtex envisaged in his answer of 10 April, Official Report, column 360, will take place; and whether British attendance will be at ministerial level.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are discussing with European Community partners and others the most appropriate forum in which to negotiate a convention. Further technical study of the feasibility of marking explosives must precede any such negotiation. The United Kingdom will continue to take a leading role.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which countries apart from Czechoslovakia have the ability to manufacture and export Semtex and as to which of these countries takes either of these courses of action.

Mr. Waldegrave: As far as I am aware, Semtex is not produced in any country other than Czechoslovakia. The Czechoslovak authorities have stated publicly that they no longer export Semtex.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Net Overseas Assets

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the value of the United Kingdom's stock of net overseas assets at the end of 1988, based on the same method of assessment as that used in the calculation for 1987 in paragraph 3·29 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89", and what are the reasons for the exclusion of any such figure from the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1989-90."

Mr. Lilley: Preliminary estimates of identified United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1988 are made available by the CSO on request. The latest estimate is of the order of £115 billion to £120 billion. (The estimated level of identified net overseas assets at the end of 1987 has been revised up to just over £100 billion).

However, the method of assessment which is used by the CSO assumes that the balancing item does not reflect errors in the capital account. In practice, it is likely that a substantial part of the balancing item, which has totalled over £40 billion in the last three years taken together, reflects unidentified capital inflows, some of which will lead to an underrecording of United Kingdom external liabilities. The standard methodology is being reconsidered by the CSO. In view of this, an estimate of overseas assets was not included in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. An estimate of the value of the United Kingdom stock of net overseas assets will, however, be included as usual in the Pink Book in August.

Debt

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt there is to be repaid after the Budget repayment is concluded.

Mr. Lilley: The total of net public sector debt outstanding is forecast to be £157 billion (32 per cent. of GDP) at the end of 1988-89, a fall from £171 billion (38 per cent. of GDP) at the end of 1987-88.

On the assumption that the stock of debt falls by the £14 billion net debt repayment forecast for 1989-90, the outstanding stock of debt at the end of the year would be £143 billion.

Cheque Guarantee Cards

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any representations concerning current expenditure limits on cheque guarantee cards; if he has any plans to ask the Office of Fair Trading to examine the operation by the banks of such limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have received no representations on the limits applicable to cheque guarantee cards. I am, however, advised that the Association for Payment Clearing Services, which is the responsible body, has yet to take a final position on the expenditure limit for cheque cards issued under the cheque guarantee card scheme, but that it is likely to do so in the near future. The current agreements between the banks and building societies concerning the standard cheque card scheme have, I understand, been furnished to the Director General of Fair Trading for examination in accordance with the requirements of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976. Individual banks are free to issue their own cheque guarantee cards providing for higher limits outside the scheme.

Privatisation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the industries remaining in the state sector by the end of 1989 for which no firm plans have yet been announced to put in the private sector.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No privatisation proposals have yet been announced for the following nationalised industries:

British Railways Board
British Waterways Board
Civil Aviation Authority
London Regional Transport
Post Office

The Government have announced the intention to privatise British Coal in the next Parliament. The Government have also announced that work has been set in hand to study the possible options, including privatisation, for the future of British Rail.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Brooke: (a) None; (b) None.

Inflation and Consumer Credit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has to tackle (a) inflation and (b) the expansion of consumer credit.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Interest rates will continue to be set to bear down on inflation. Interest rates are also the only effective means in an open economy of curbing consumer credit growth, if excessive.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security Statistics

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the security statistics for 1988 are now available, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes, the statistics for 1988 are as follows (statistics for earlier years are contained in Official Report 7 March 1988, columns 67-74 inclusive):

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official

Report to show how many (a) shotguns, (b) hand-guns and (c) air- and gas-powered weapons legally held in Northern Ireland are held for (i) sporting purposes, (ii) possession only and (iii) personal protection, or as much of such information as is available to him for each year since 1976 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 23 March 1989]: The approval for the holding of firearms for particular purposes is a matter for the chief constable, and it is not the practice to disclose details.

PRIME MINISTER

Chief Press Secretary

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current grade of the chief press secretary and the salary attached to that grade.

The Prime Minister: The current grade of the chief press secretary is grade 3, which has a salary range, inclusive of discretionary points and London allowance, of £39,600 —£49,600.

10 Downing Street and Chequers (Works of Art)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will publish a table showing (a) the works of art, objects or artefacts currently on loan from national museums and galleries at (i) 10 Downing street and (ii) Chequers, (b) the museum or gallery from whose collections they are loaned and (c) the term of each loan.

The Prime Minister: Details of the paintings, reproductions and photographs at 10 Downing street were given in the Official Report, 29 October 1987 at columns 359-63. The further information requested is only available at disproportionate cost.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, respectively, and overall in his Office are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Luce: The number of women and ethnic minorities in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 serving in the Cabinet Office is:

6	8	29	0	0

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when his Office last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The last survey was conducted in 1986. There are no plans to repeat it, but the ethnic origins of all new entrants to the department are monitored on a continuous basis.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep and Lambs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigations he is making as to the causes of death of numbers of sheep and lambs in west Somerset and elsewhere; whether the injections of sheep by the vaccines Heptavac P and Ryvac 7P and the simultaneous use of an organo-phosphrous compound in sheep dips are safe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials are assessing all relevant information, including so far as is possible the husbandry, nutritional and medical history of the flocks where suspected adverse reactions have occurred, and results of post mortem examinations.

Vaccines such as Heptavac P and Ryvac 7P and organo-phosphrous sheep dips have both been very widely used in the national flock for many years without giving rise to any evidence that their use together is unsafe. Nevertheless, it is a point I have asked my officials to examine in the context of their investigations.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: During the financial year 1988-89, my Department purchased 43 vehicles, at a total cost of £336,800. All vehicles were EC-made, but the number that were specifically British-made is not readily available, since many models are produced in more than one EC country.

Information about non-departmental public bodies for which I am responsible is not readily available.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to make a statement regarding the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 10 April at column 362.

Receiverships

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms have gone into receivership during the last 12 months.

Mr. Maude: Statistics of receiverships are not analysed by trade. Figures are, however, available for bankruptcies and company liquidations in England and Wales for agriculture and horticulture. The latest figures are for 1987, when there were 172 bankruptcies and 126 company insolvencies. These and related figures were published in an article on insolvencies on pages 32 and 33 of the British business dated 28 October 1988, which is available in the Library.

WALES

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to issue guidelines to local education authorities in Wales for the training of school governors in special educational needs, in order to help them fulfil their duties under the Education Act 1981; whether this is part of the programme he is promoting to encourage community care; if he will provide financial resourses to facilitate such training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: All local education authorities in Wales will receive education support grant for governor training in 1989-90. In submitting applications for grant LFAs were invited to detail their proposals for training courses. Some mentioned special educational needs specifically and my officials intend to monitor the position.

The Department's publication "School Governors: A Guide to the law" contains a chapter on governors' responsibility for pupils with special educational needs. Copies have been distributed to all school governors of county and controlled schools. A similar publication for special schools will be issued shortly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to issue a circular to local education authorities in Wales on the implications of the Education Reform Act 1988 on the needs of children with special educational requirements under the Education Act 1981; what consultation he is having with local education authorities, voluntary organisations dealing with special education needs including Mencap in Wales and with education specialists in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has issued a draft circular for consultation on assessment and statementing procedures under the Education Act 1981. It includes guidance on the implications of the Education Reform Act for pupils with special educational needs. A Welsh Office circular on the national curriculum and assessment will be issued shortly and will be followed by a guide for teachers. These will also contain references to special educational needs, as do the notes accompanying the Statutory Orders prescribing the attainment targets and programmes of study for mathematics and science in the curriculum. Welsh Office circular 36/88 contains guidance on provision for children with special educational needs in the arrangements for local management of schools. The Curriculum Council for Wales has decided to set up a committee to consider special educational needs in the curriculum. Mencap, as well as other bodies interested in special educational needs have been included in the consultations to date.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish procedures for monitoring the situation in mainstream schools to ensure that at least one, and preferably two, governors have a specific interest in, and knowledge of, special educational needs, in line with the proposals of the Warnock report.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the 1981 Education Act, every school must have a "responsible person" who ensures that all who are likely to teach a pupil are told that he has a statement of special educational needs. This person may be the head, the chairman of governors or another governor. We have no plans to change these requirements.

Water Quality

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list all water supplies in Wales that are in breach of the European Economic Community directive on water quality in respect of safety limits on lead in drinking water; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list all water supplies in Wales in breach of the European Economic Community directive on water quality in respect of safety limits in lead in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The most recent information relates to February 1989 when the following supplies failed to comply with the requirements of the EC drinking water directive in respect of lead:

Eithin Fynydd
Talybont
Dyffryn
Cilfor
Rhyd-Ddu

The Welsh water authority has confirmed that all necessary remedial action will be completed by December 1989.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital beds there were by specialty in 1979 and in 1988.

Mr. Grist: Information on the numbers of hospital beds is published annually in "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House. The latest edition is for the year ending March 1988.

Health Service (Waiting Lists)

Mrs. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of people on waiting lists for each type of operation in each health district in Wales and the number who have been waiting for over six months, one year, two years, three years or more for each type of operation in each health district in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally. However, hospital waiting list bulletins, published bi-annually, provide waiting list statistics for individual specialties and for individual hospitals. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has received on the effect of the uncertainty over the present and second Severn crossing on decisions on the possible location of new heavy industry in Wales;

(2) if he will publish an assessment of the effects of the uncertainty over the present Severn road crossing and future crossings on decisions on the locations of new heavy industry in south Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is no uncertainty over the present and second Severn road crossings.

Water

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of the amount spent by Welsh Water on advertising and publicity since 1 January.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh Water Authority. I suggest that the hon. Lady writes to the chairman of the authority direct.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve any of the trunk roads leading into Aberystwyth, Cardiganshire during the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Improvement of the A44 between Capel Bangor and Penllwyn is planned within the next five years.

Investment

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his answer of 11 April, Official Report, column 480, he will give details of what records are kept relating to inquiries of WINvest; and what indicators he considers useful in assessing the level of interest in Wales as a location for investment.

Mr. Peter Walker: Inquiries to WINvest are recorded at the time of receipt but comprehensive records are not maintained for the reason I gave the hon. Gentleman on 11 April at column 480.

A more useful indicator of the levels of interest being shown in Wales as a location for investment is the number of companies actually visiting Wales for the first time. There were 246 such visits in 1987, 241 in 1988 and 76 in the first quarter of 1989.

M4

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will now, in view of the worsening of congestion along Baglan road, Port Talbot, accelerate the start of the work on the Baglan-Lonlas part of the M4.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Earlswood-Lonlas section of the motorway is planned to start in January 1990. Advancing the Baglan-Earlswood contracts would be at the expense of other schemes, including those on the A55. The Baglan-Lonlas scheme is expected to be completed by mid 1994.

Work will start shortly on a scheme to relieve delays at the M4 Baglan junction. This will give greater priority to M4 westbound traffic.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when work commenced on the last part of the M4 to be completed; and why there has been a delay in the start of the Baglan-Lonlas road.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Work on the Bridgend northern by-pass started in 1978. Given that the A48 already provides Baglan-Lonlas with a dual carriageway link to the M4 the decision was taken to give priority to the A55. Baglan-Lonlas will have higher priority as expenditure on the A55 starts to fall.

Health Service

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those occasions on which his Department has made direct contributions to voluntary appeals for financial assistance towards expenditure on items for use in the National Health Service in Wales since 1979; and what sums were involved in each case.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 11 April 1989]: There have been no such contributions as far as I am aware.

Deeside Waterfront Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Deeside waterfront scheme; if he will visit and meet Alyn and Deeside district council to discuss the waterfront project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Alyn and Deeside district council have referred the planning applications for this scheme to me. I have decided that the practical implications of this scheme, which is clearly of major significance to north-east Wales, should be thoroughly assessed at a public local inquiry and I have today called-in the applications for determination. In these circumstances a meeting with the council would be inappropriate.

ENERGY

Coal Imports

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the regional distribution of the final destination of coal imports from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the type of Government subsidy and the approximate subsidy per tonne of the coals imported into Britain from (a) Australia, (b) Poland, (c) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, (d) South Africa and (e) Latin American countries; if he will list comparable information on subsidies to British coal exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government give no specific subsidies to support exports of British coal. We have no evidence of such subsidies in the countries listed.

Director General of Electricity Supply (Staff)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the present position in regard to the staffing of the offices of the proposed Director General of Electricity Supply; and by what date he anticipates that provisional appointments will be made.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Planning for the establishment of the Office of Electricity Regulation (OFFER) is under way. It is hoped that a suitable candidate for the post of Director General of Electricity Supply (DGES) will be identified in time for him or her to participate in the process of setting up OFFER. To this end, a firm of selection consultants has been appointed to assist my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in finding a suitable candidate. Formal appointments to OFFER will take place after enactment of the Electricity Bill currently before Parliament.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) British Coal, (c) the electricity industry and (d) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Parkinson: The answers are:

(a) None.

(b) and (c) Purchases by British Coal, the electricity industry and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority are matters for the industries themselves. I have asked the respective chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

(d) The Oil and Pipelines Agency, for which I was then responsible, bought one vehicle; it was non-British and cost £13,277.

North Sea Oil Spills (Equipment)

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what type of oil spill containment and treatment equipment is available, and within what time span, for any spills or seepages that may occur near the North Sea oil platforms and depots.

Mr. Parkinson: Stocks of oil spill containment and treatment equipment are held by the oil industry, in accordance with their contingency plans, and Government. All standby vessels around offshore oil installations carry spraying equipment and dispersants. These vessels are required to be within five nautical miles of the installation. Dispersants and spraying equipment, for use in aircraft and larger vessels, are based at strategic locations around the coast. Inflatable booms and skimmer systems for containment and recovery of oil from the sea surface are also available.

The response strategy employed largely depends on the size and nature of the spill and its location, but it is expected that, where necessary, oil companies will respond quickly enough to prevent damage to the environment. Specifically, for spills of oil from platforms in near shore areas, operators are required to be able to mount an initial response within 30 minutes using treatment equipment held on the standby vessel. Back-up resources must then be made available within half the minimum time predicted for oil to reach the beach.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Vietnamese boat people have been permitted to become residents in the United Kingdom during the last 12 months for which figures are available; and how many of these came via refugee camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: The total number of south-east Asian refugees accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1988 is published in table 3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 10/89 "Control of Immigration Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. Of these, 205 came from Hong Kong. No further breakdown by nationality is available.

Hong Kong Citizens

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of Hong Kong were permitted to become resident in the United Kingdom during the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what were the categories of reasons for these permissions.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is given in the following table:

Acceptances for settlement in 1988 of British Dependent Territory Citizens from Hong Kong by category of acceptance

Acceptances	Number
Completed four years in approved employment	160
Completed four years in permit-free employment	20
Husbands	160
Wives	320
Children	170
Other	320
Total acceptances	1,150

Attempted Murder Statistics

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons convicted of attempted murder left prison in each of the last five years; and what was the average length of detention in each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost because of the large number of cases that would require checking. The readily available information relates to the length of sentence imposed and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables vol. 2 (tables S2.3 and S2.4 of the issue for 1987, Cm. 498). Copies are held in the Library.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals are currently serving sentences for attempted murder in United Kingdom prisons; and what is their average length of sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that on 31 December 1988 about 13 non-British citizens were serving sentences in prison service establishments in England and Wales for attempted murder. About half of them were serving life sentences. The lengths of sentence of those serving determinate sentences varied from under one year up to 30 years; their average sentence was about 14 years.

Rehabilitation of Offenders Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is any facility on the police national computer to distinguish between spent and unspent convictions under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is at present no facility available on the police national computer to distinguish between convictions which are spent or unspent under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act. This is, however, one of the facilities being considered for implementation on the police national computer in due course.

Firearms Consultative Committee

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to consult the Firearms Consultative Committee before publishing security arrangements under the firearms legislation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Advice on safe-keeping arrangements for firearms and shot guns will be contained in new guidance to the police on the administration of the firearms legislation. This will be issued, and made publicly available, at the end of May, in readiness for the introduction of the remaining provisions of the Act, and new rules, in the summer. There has been extensive consultation on the guidance with shooting and other interests. I regard it as important to have the Firearms Consultative Committee in place as soon as possible but the implementation of the new provisions cannot await consultation with the committee. It will, however, be open to the committee to keep under review and make recommendations on the administration and enforcement of the safe-keeping requirements.

Police Cars (Accidents)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the availability of compensation for the families of pedestrians killed by police cars pursuing other vehicles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The position in respect of compensation for injury, loss of life or damage to property following a road accident involving a police vehicle is in general the same as following any other road accident. Any compensation or other payments would normally be dealt with under insurance cover arrangements.

Libyan Citizens

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Libyan citizens are: (a) currently serving sentences and (b) awaiting sentencing in United Kingdom prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The nationality of remand prisoners is not recorded centrally. On 31 December 1988 the latest date for which information is readily available, central records show seven Libyan citizens serving sentences in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times a body belt has been used on an inmate in prison in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales 1988" (table 10·2 of the latest issue, for 1987, Cm 547), copies of which are held in the Library.

Firearms Act 1988

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters he has received to date about the Firearms Act 1988 (a) from when his proposals were first published until First Reading, (b) between First Reading and Royal Assent and (c) since Royal Assent until the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not kept in the precise form requested but figures compiled on a monthly basis from September 1987, when I announced our proposals, to March 1989 are as follows:

	Number
1987
September	819
October	904
November	962

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to comply with the recommendation of the Association of Chief Police Officers to create a national register for missing persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has now received the association's report. They have requested that he consult the Central Conference of Chief Constables on its recommendations. This he is now doing.

Mrs. Robina Kausar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when papers were referred to him concerning an entry clearance application made by Mrs. Robina Kausar at the post in Islamabad; when it was discovered these papers had been lost and a duplicate referral requested from the post; when Mrs. Kausar's husband in the United Kingdom was interviewed; when a decision is to be taken on this application made at Islamabad on 24 August 1987; when he received the copy of a letter from the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to the hon. Member for Bradford, West, dated 5 December 1988 concerning the case, stating it was to be treated with priority.

Mr. Renton: Mrs. Kausar's entry clearance application to join her husband, Mr. Muhammed Nazir, for settlement was referred to the immigration and nationality department on 12 January 1988 because documents submitted by the sponsor appeared to have been altered. At no time were any of the papers connected with this case mislaid, and I am sorry that the hon. Member was misinformed on this point.

Owing to the large backlog of work in the Department, the application was not however considered until 21 November. I received a copy of the letter dated 5 December 1988 sent by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Bradford, West on 12 December, by which time we had begun our inquiries into the employment aspects of the application. These were necessary after it was confirmed that Mr. Nazir had furnished forged documents in support of the maintenance requirements of the immigration rules.

It was not felt necessary to interview Mr. Nazir as our outstanding inquiries could more easily be answered by correspondence with the employer and solicitor. A decision to authorise settlement entry clearance was taken on 10 April immediately following receipt of a satisfactory reply on the employment aspect. Notification has been sent accordingly to the entry clearance officer in Islamabad who will contact Mrs. Kausar once it has been received.

Cigarettes Sales

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to take any further steps to enforce section 1 of the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 in relation to the sale of individual cigarettes to young people under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Enforcement of the law on the sale of cigarettes to persons under the age of 16 is an operational matter for the chief officer of the police force concerned. If the hon. Member is aware of any general problem in the enforcement of the legislation, perhaps he would let us have the details.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial provision is made by the prison department for persons released from custody following their imprisonment for fine default.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 14 April 1989]: Persons released from custody following imprisonment in default of payment of a fine receive a subsistence allowance to cover the period until they can reach an office of the Department of Social Security and a travel warrant or payment in cash for fares to their home address or destination.

Probation Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were the findings of the Audit Commission inquiry into the workings of the probation service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action his Department will be taking following receipt of the Audit Commission report entitled "The Probation Service, Promoting Value for Money".

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 14 April 1989]: The Audit Commission found that well planned and targeted probation work can be effective, and that there is an important role for the probation service to play in providing the courts with more commuity-based services. But the Audit Commission calls for several improvements, which have to be made before the probation service can do this: supervising offenders more effectively; focusing activities more sharply on serious offenders; better research and evaluation of effectiveness; closer collaboration with the courts and other agencies; and improving management systems.

I welcome the report. Further action on its important recommendations will be closely linked to action on the proposals set out in the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community", and the programme of work set out in part 2 of the Green Paper (and in "Tackling Offending: an Action Plan") is already in hand. Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation will be collaborating with the Audit Commission in a series of "value for money" audits in probation areas throughout England and Wales, starting in 1990.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales received notification of their actual parole date after the passing of their parole eligibility date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 April 1989]: Accurate statistics of the number of cases where inmates have been notified of the outcome of their parole review after their parole eligibility date will not be available until a new computer system is operational. In 1988, about 6,100 parole dossiers were delayed beyond this target.

Bookshops (Arson Attacks)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what urgent action is being taken in the light of the recent arson attacks on bookshops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 April 1989]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that two attacks on London bookshops are at present being investigated. No conclusions can be drawn until the inquiries are complete.

DNA Testing

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the introduction of DNA testing for the purposes of the immigration rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 13 April 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 13 April 1989 at column 1046 and to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollock (Mr. Dunnachie) on 10 April 1989 at column 321.

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures of numbers of cases requiring new consideration in the light of DNA blood tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 14 April 1989]: As DNA evidence can be produced at any stage of the entry clearance process, it is not readily possible to quantify the number of cases involved. A substantial number of applications and appeals have been resolved on the basis of DNA evidence which established the relevant relationships. A number of cases involving reapplicants who no longer qualify for admission have been deferred pending my right hon. Friend's decision on whether and in what circumstances to exercise his discretion outside the rules.

Tamil Refugees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of Tamils from Sri Lanka who have been given refugee status in the United Kingdom in the last three years.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 14 April 1989]: Statistics are not kept on the number of refugees who belong to specific ethnic groups. The numbers of Sri Lankans granted asylum in the last three years are as follows:

	Number
1986	4
1987	6
1988	[1]9

[1] provisional.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement explaining the reasons for awarding the contract for the police national computer to Siemens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 April 1989]: The hardware for the replacement police national computer was the subject of an open competition which was won by Siemens plc because its proposal offered best value for money.

Special Constables

Mr Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many special constables are employed as security guards.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 14 April 1989]: Information is not held centrally on the private occupations of special constables appointed by chief constables under section 16 of the Police Act 1964. Special constables appointed under other legislation are not a matter for my right hon. Friend, although we are aware of one case where employees of a security firm were provided under contract to the owners of a port and sworn in as special constables by the local justices.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecution Witnesses

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on contacts between prosecution witnesses in the case of Hosni E. Farhat and Ahmed Gaddafi Aidain of Libya; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: None.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his policy towards the enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 in the light of the decision of Mr. Justice Warner to adjourn applications for injunctions brought on behalf of local authorities to restrain various do-it-yourself stores from Sunday trading.

The Attorney-General: Enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 is, by virtue of section 71 of that Act, the duty of the local authorities, which have the necessary powers. In my view, the possibility that provisions of any part of any Act may at a future date be held by the European Court of Justice to be incompatible with the United Kingdom's obligations under the treaty of Rome is irrelevant to the question of statutory responsibility for enforcement of such an Act. I accordingly consider that such responsibility in respect of the Shops Act is unaffected by article 177 references that have been made in certain cases, and that accordingly local authorities remain subject to their duty to enforce the Act.

The decision of Mr. Justice Warner was given in January in a case brought by the King's Lynn, Chester and Worcester local authorities. I understand they were seeking summary judgment on their applications for final injunctions against certain DIY stores. Mr. Justice Warner adjourned the applications on the ground, I understand, that the outcome of the references to the European Court of Justice in other cases would establish whether the defendants had an arguable case or not.

The learned judge's decision in my view does not conflict with the opinion I have here expressed as to responsibility for enforcement of the Shops Act.

The proceedings were unusual in that the local authority was seeking to show that the shops had no arguable case and that the authority should therefore have a final injunction immediately. The learned judge, in his discretion, thought this was premature. But, as I understand he was at pains to point out, it remains open to local authorities in England and Wales to seek interlocutory injunctions to restrain Sunday trading: nor does the decision have any bearing on discretionary considerations in the conduct of prosecutions.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide for the latest available 12 month period (a)

the number of Queen's counsel excluding Treasury counsel, (b) the amount of total public money received by Queen's counsel, (c) the number of cases dealt with by Queen's counsel, (e) the number of cases prosecuted by Queen's counsel, (f) the average fee, brief and refreshers, in prosecution cases, (g) the number of criminal cases defended by Queen's counsel where payment was made from public funds, (h) the average fee for defence counsel, brief and refreshers, in criminal cases where payment was made from public funds, (i) the duration of average criminal case in which Queen's counsel appeared and (j) the average income of Queen's counsel from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General (holding answer 23 March 1989): There are currently 673 Queen's counsel. In 1987-88, the average brief fee for a trial in the Crown court payable to Queen's counsel representing legally aided defendants was £3,273·20 and the average full day refresher was £271·30. The number of criminal cases defended by Queen's counsel where payment was made from public funds was around 1,440. The other information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Junior Counsel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney General if he will provide for the latest available 12 month period in respect of the Crown court (a) the total amount of public money received by junior counsel, (b) the number of cases dealt with by junior counsel, (c) the number of cases prosecuted by junior counsel, (d) the average fee, brief and refreshers, in prosecution cases prosecuted by junior counsel, (e) the number of criminal cases defended by junior counsel where payment was made from public funds and (f) the average fee for defence counsel, brief and refreshers, in criminal cases where payment was made from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General (holding answer 23 March 1989): On 1987-88, the average brief fee for a trial in the Crown court payable to junior counsel representing legally aided defendants was £557·90, and the average full day refresher was £136. The number of cases defended by junior counsel where payment was made from public funds was around 94,030. The other information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide for the latest available 12-month period, the duration of average criminal case in which junior counsel appeared, in days, the average income of junior counsel from public funds in respect of the magistrates' courts (a) the amount of total public money received by junior counsel, (b) the number of cases dealt with by junior counsel, (c) the number of cases prosecuted by junior counsel, (d) the average fee, brief and refreshers, in prosecution cases prosecuted by junior counsel, (e) the number of criminal cases defended by junior counsel where payment was made from public funds, (f) the average fee for defence counsel, brief and refreshers, in criminal cases where payment was made from public funds, (g) the duration of average criminal case in which junior counsel appeared, in hours, and (h) the average income of junior counsel from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General [holding answer 23 March 1989]: The information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Solicitors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide for the latest available 12-month period (a) the number of solicitors regularly practising in firms offering legal services to the public, (b) the number of solicitors regularly practising in the criminal courts, (c) the number of solicitors' firms on the criminal legal aid panel and (d) the number of solicitors firms on a duty solicitor scheme for police stations; in respect of the Crown courts, what is (i) the amount of total public money received by solicitors retained to defend and (ii) the number of cases in which publicly funded solicitors instructed counsel to defend; in respect of criminal cases in the magistrates' courts, what is (1) the amount of total public money received by solicitors, (2) the number of cases dealt with by solicitors, including those where junior counsel was instructed, (3) the average cost of publicly funded defence cases, and (4) the duration of average criminal cases in hours, in respect of 24 hour duty solicitor schemes, what is (A) the number of visits made to police stations, (B) the duration of the average visit, (C) the total cost and (D) the average cost; and in respect of court based duty solicitor schemes, what is (a1) the number of defendants represented, (a2) the total cost and (a3) the average cost per defendant; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General [holding answer 23 March 1989]: There are currently 50,494 solicitors in England and Wales with practising certificates. In 1987-88, 405,000 payments were made out of the legal aid fund in respect of criminal cases in the magistrates' courts at an average cost of £281·21 per case. In 1987-88, 170,655 visits were made to police stations under the 24-hour duty solicitor scheme and the total cost of the scheme was £23·2 million, at an average cost per suspect of £85·38. In 1987-88, 99,864 defendants were represented under the magistrates courts duty solicitor scheme and the total cost of the scheme was £4·8 million, at an average cost per defendant of £28·88. The other information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the issue of the verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty was last discussed by a meeting of NATO defence ministers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of what is discussed at meetings of NATO's Defence Ministers are confidential but NATO's Defence Ministers are briefed regularly on nuclear arms control matters, including nuclear testing.

RAF (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times in the last 10 years security has been tested and evaluated at (a) RAF Finningley and (b)

840 Signal Unit, Lindholme, for both (i) civilian and (ii) service personnel; and if he will make a statement on the results.

Mr. Neubert: Security arrangements at all RAF stations are tested frequently, but for obvious reasons it would not be in the public interest to reveal details of those evaluations or their results.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the last two years the number of (a) movements at and (b) personnel of the armed services who have used RAF Finningley; how many times civilian aircraft were used; and what types of aircraft were so deployed.

Mr. Neubert: Since RAF Finningley's task is flying training rather than air transport, aggregated records of military movements are not kept, nor do service personnel normally use the station as an airhead. There were 69 civil aircraft movements at RAF Finningley in 1987 and 25 in 1988, almost entirely by air taxi and light executive aircraft, including air ambulance flights.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and date of deployments of the Skyguard radar system in Yorkshire.

Mr. Neubert: The Skyguard radar system has not been deployed in a low flying monitoring role in Yorkshire.

Disarmament

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many nuclear warheads assigned to NATO control have been withdrawn from deployment since April; what types of warhead they were; what has been done with the nuclear material recovered from the warheads; and whether the withdrawals were under multilateral or bilateral agreements or by unilateral decision;

(2) how many nuclear warheads were deployed by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, and in what countries, in April 1959, 1969, 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1979, NATO Defence Ministers agreed to reduce by 1,000 the number of NATO nuclear warheads stockpiled in Europe. In 1983, at their meeting in Montebello, the Ministers decided to reduce the stockpile by a further 1,400 warheads. Those two actions together have resulted in bringing the NATO nuclear stockpile in Europe to its lowest level for more than 20 years. The level is being further reduced as warheads are removed in association with the implementation of the INF treaty. All the 2,400 warheads removed were the property of the United States Government; the disposal of the nuclear materials contained in them is therefore a matter for the United States Government. Details of the types and location of NATO's nuclear warheads in Europe are classified, but the number of NATO LRINF and SRINF systems with nuclear-capable variants is set out in figures 18 and 19 of volume 1 of the Statement on Defence Estimates 1988 (Cm 344-I).

Low Flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify the type of aircraft and operating bases of the military jets which made low-level flights over East Linton at 4.30 pm on 21 March and at 2.25 pm on 29 March; and if he will make a statement on the speed and height of those flights.

Mr. Neubert: United Kingdom and other military aircraft are authorised as a matter of routine to carry out low-level flying training in the area mentioned at heights no lower than 250 ft and at speeds normally not exceeding 450 knots. Aircraft may originate from a number of flying stations in both the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the large uninhabited areas of the world used for low-level flight training referred to in his Department's current advertising campaign for the recruitment of Royal Air Force officers.

Mr. Neubert: The RAF flying training at altitudes under 250 ft, which is needed to refine aircrew skills, is mainly undertaken in virtually unpopulated parts of the United States and Canada.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the installation of transponder equipment on military aircraft which will provide warning directly to the pilots of other aircraft flying at low level of the presence of conflicting air traffic.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 25 January 1989]: The Ministry of Defence has placed a small contract for a study into the feasibility of giving military aircraft collision warning facilities in order to give early warning of conflicting military traffic, in particular, by utilising existing transponder equipment.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to inform the general public of Her Majesty's Government's commitment to the Falkland Islands garrison and its upkeep since 1981; what future reviews are planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Government policy on the defence of the Falkland Islands has been set out in successive statements on the Defence Estimates. The maintenance of a garrison continues to be necessary in support of the Falkland islanders' right to live in peace and security under a Government of their choosing. The adequacy of that garrison to fulfil its task is kept under constant review.

Tucano Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tucano aircraft, to the full specification, have so far been delivered to the Royal Air Force for training use; and how many were due to be delivered by this time under the terms of the original contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: Fourteen aircraft have been delivered to the RAF; 59 aircraft should have been delivered by now, under the terms of the contract signed on 30 April 1985.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1987-88, the most recent year for which full information is currently available, some 8,200 logistic vehicles, ranging from small vans and cars to heavy trucks, were purchased by the Ministry of Defence at a total cost of £180 million. Apart from 258 bought at a cost of £1·5 million, all of these vehicles were UK-produced in accordance with the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as UK-produced if the UK content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value. No vehicles were purchased by the Ministry of Defence for other public sector agencies.

Employment Law

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those provisions of employment law which do not apply to members of the forces.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 11 April 1989]: The terms of service of members of the armed forces are governed by service law and regulations. The extent to which the provisions of civil employment legislation apply to the Crown in general and to the armed forces in particular is set out where appropriate in the legislation itself. Many of the most significant of such provisions are contained in the Employment Protection Act 1975 and the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978; I refer the right hon. Gentleman especially to sections 121 and 138 respectively, which state that those Acts do not apply to service as a member of the naval, military or air forces of the Crown.

ENVIRONMENT

Cricket

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet Mr. Ted Dexter; and if he will make a statement on the future of British cricket.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no present plans to do so. If Mr. Dexter would like a meeting, I would be happy to see him. I wish everyone involved with English cricket a very successful season.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information his Department has on the level of registration and non-registration for the poll tax in (a) England and (b) Nottingham;

(2) if he will make a statement on progress on registration for the poll tax in England.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. As far as the community charge is concerned, the hon. Member really cannot seriously expect any information on levels of registration before registration officers have even started to compile their registers. Registration officers have until the end of November 1989 to complete their initial registers.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates his Department has made of the costs of collecting the poll tax compared with collecting the rates in (a) Nottingham and (b) England as a whole.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

We estimate that the cost of collecting community charges in England and Wales would be approximately twice the cost of collecting rates, since there will be twice as many chargepayers as there are now ratepayers. The two tax alternatives proposed by Labour would, of course, cost significantly more than either rates or the community charge to collect.

We have made no estimate of the collection costs for any individual charging authority.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a ward sister would pay (a) in poll tax and (b) in rates if she lived in (i) a typical one-bedroom flat and (ii) a typical two-bedroomed house in Nottingham.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Based on 1988-89 figures, a ward sister living in a flat or house of average rateable value in Nottingham would pay a rates bill of around £430. This compares with the illustrative community charge figure of £251 (with no safety net) or £231 (with the safety net).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities on current estimates which will levy (a) the highest and (b) the lowest level of poll tax; giving the political control in each authority.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Illustrative community charges for 1988-89 were published on 23 June 1988 and placed in the Library.

Based on these figures, the 10 highest ranking areas are Camden, Tower Hamlets, Greenwich, Hackney, Lewisham, Southwark, Lambeth, Islington, City of London and Hammersmith and Fulham. All are Labour-controlled London boroughs, with the exception of the City, which is independent. The community charge in all ten reflects spending by the Labour-controlled Inner London education authority.

The 10 lowest ranking areas are Isles of Scilly (independent), Runnymede (Conservative), Purbeck (no overall control), Rochester upon Medway (Conservative), Redbridge (Conservative), North Dorset (independent), West Dorset (independent), Hereford (Liberal), Poole (Conservative) and South Herefordshire (independent).

The county councils providing services in these areas —Kent (Rochester and Medway), Dorset (Purbeck, North and West Dorset), Surrey (Runneymede), Herefordshire (Hereford, South Herefordshire)—are all under Conservative control.

No Labour-controlled authority figures in any way among the low spenders whereas, with one exception, all the high spenders are Labour-controlled.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list numbers and sources of representations on the poll tax which he has received from individuals and organisations in Nottingham.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Correspondence on the community charge is not recorded within my Department according to the local government area from which it is received.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for publicity on registration for the community charge in the period before 22 May, including (a) the timing, coverage and cost of any newspaper advertisements, (b) the timing and cost of any hoarding advertisements, (c) proposed methods of distribution, timing and cost of any leaflets, (d) the use of broadcast media and the timing and cost, and (e) the timing and cost of any promotional tours, breakfast, meetings, and exhibitions involving Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Ridley: When details of the complete package are finalised, I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission research to establish the proportion of the increase or decrease of those registering to vote (a) in Nottingham and (b) in England and Wales as a result of the poll tax and its registration powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to do so. The register of electors and the community charges register are different registers, separately compiled, and we do not think that research of the kind suggested would be profitable even if it were feasible.

Footpaths

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the speed with which correspondence between Department of Environment offices in Bristol concerning footpaths and the Secretary of the Peak and Northern Footpaths Society has been dealt; and whether he has any plans to increase the number of officials dealing with footpaths and public rights of way.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Every effort is made to deal with all correspondence as quickly as possible, the resources necessary to deal with work on public rights of way are kept under review. There has been a substantial reduction in the time taken to decide opposed rights of way orders even though workload is increasing.

Countryside Task Force

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Countryside Commission position statement "Working for the Countryside" and, in particular, on its ideas for a countryside task force.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Countryside Commission issued its position statement "Working for the Countryside" on 31 March to mark the conclusion of the community programme. The statement recognises the value of the contribution made to environmental work by the CP and puts forward suggestions for bridging the gap between CP and the smaller environmental and countryside work component of the employment training programme. I welcome the Commission's efforts with the Training Agency to encourage as many countryside bodies as possible to use the new scheme as effectively as some have already done. The commission's thinking on its longer-term concept of a national countryside task force is as yet only at a preliminary stage. I have asked the commission to work up the details so we can take a considered view of it.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the authorities and research centres undertaking research into the incidence of cryptosporidia in water, with an indication of the resources available to them in terms of (a) staff, (b) government financial support, (c) other public sector finance and (d) other sources of financing.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held centrally. However, the expert group on cryptosporidium in water supplies which was announced in my reply of 2 March, column 286, will be examining the occurrence and extent of cryptosporidia in water supplies and the need for further research.

Sewage Works (North Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any proposals to relax quality controls for sewage works at Ashover, Clay Cross and Kelstedge in the North Derbyshire district of the Seven-Trent water authority.

Mr. Howard: I have received an application for a time limited consent variation in respect of the Clay Cross sewage treatment works. No such applications have been received in respect of the sewage treatment works at either Ashover or Kelstedge.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) water authorities, (c) local authorities and (d) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Ridley: The Crown Suppliers (a trading fund account of the Property Services Agency), operate a self-drive vehicle contract hire service, providing vehicles to a number of Government Departments and public sector organisations.

During 1988, the Crown Suppliers purchased 1,007 vehicles at a total cost of £7,538,640.

Five hundred and fifty seven vehicles were United Kingdom-produced, on the definition employed by the DTI for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value. The remainder (with the exception of one vehicle) were manufactured within the EEC.

Details of vehicle purchased by water authorities, local authorities and other public sector agencies are not the responsibility of my Department.

House of Commons (Terrace Pavilion)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify all the costs associated with the erection of the Terrace Pavilion of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: The costs of the Terrace awning which are being carried on my Department's Vote are approximately £35,000. The balance of the total cost of about £150,000 is being paid by the House of Commons Refreshment Department.

Water Bill (Leaflets)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the cost to his Department of printing the Water Bill series of leaflets, launched on 10 April.

Mr. Howard: Two leaflets have been produced so far, at a total cost of just under £3,000.

Water Authorities (Advertising)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the amount spent on advertising and publicity by each water authority since 1 January.

Mr. Howard: This is a matter for the authorities.

Flood Alerts (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for flood alerts in those London boroughs opting not to be part of the tidal flood warning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for the London boroughs, which have the necessary powers under section 138 of the Local Government Act 1972, to determine whether the risk of flooding justifies maintaining the siren warning system or taking other action.

London Residuary Body (Assets)

Mr. Tony Banks To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards exist to ensure that London ratepayers receive the best possible price for public assets disposed of by the London residuary body.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomleyy: Paragraph 7 (2) of schedule 13 to the Local Government Act 1985 subjects the London residuary body to section 123 (2) of the Local Government Act 1972, which requires the LRB to obtain the Secretary of State's consent to any disposal of land not required for carrying out its functions for less than the best consideration reasonably obtainable. Section 79 of the 1985 Act provides that the LRB is audited in accordance with the provisions of part III of the Local Government Finance Act 1982.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which properties have been the subject of discussion between his Department and the London residuary body prior to their disposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The disposal of a wide range of the LRB's property portfolio has been the subject of discussion as the need has arisen.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that records are made publicly available in respect of the price paid and the names of the new owners of former publicly-owned assets sold by the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Waste Management (Greater London)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report commissioned from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on arrangements for waste management in Greater London and the former metropolitan county areas is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The report is being published today and copies have been placed in the Library. The report has concluded that the local authorities in the relevant areas are working together effectively under statutory and voluntary arrangements to achieve generally acceptable operating standards, although some areas of possible improvement have been identified.

I have decided, therefore, that no new arrangements are required under section 10(2) of the Local Government Act 1985, but I have instructed Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to pursue its recommendations for improvements in performance directly with the local authorities concerned.

Anti-competitive Practices

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many anti-competitive practices have been referred to him under the Local Government Act 1988; how many involve the refusal of the use of an authority's depot; and how many times he has exercised his powers under the Act.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 13 April 1989]: The Department has received approximately 80 complaints about a wide range of alleged anti-competitive practices adopted by local authorities under the Local Government Act 1988. About half of these complaints concern the alleged refusal by authorities to make their depots available to contractors. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not yet exercised his sanction powers under part I of the 1988 Act, but a number of authorities have decided to modify their practice after approaches by the Department and other cases are not yet closed. Under similar new powers in section 19A of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, however, he has served a notice on one authority for alleged anti-competitive behaviour in the award of building and maintenance work.

Green Belt

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Uxbridge concerning the London Green Belt Estate on 8 March, Official Report, column 524, (a) whether he has to give his consent to the disposal of any title and (b) if he will indicate what is his policy towards the use of his reserve powers under the Green Belt (London and Home Counties) Act 1938 about which he gave assurance at the time of the abolition of the former Greater London Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 April 1989]: A High Court judgment of March 1988 established that section 5 of the 1938 Act continues to require local authorities to obtain the consent of my right hon. Friend for the disposal of land held under that Act notwithstanding that other legislation also applies to the sale. In determining applications under the 1938 Act, my right hon. Friend's primary concern, in line with the assurances given in 1984 and 1985, is to ensure that the land concerned continues to fulfil the objectives both of the 1938 Act and of green belt policy as set out in planning policy guidance note 2.

Stocken Hall, Rutland

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will list the steps taken by the Property Services Agency to carry out the instructions of his predecessor, following the public inquiry on 7 October 1980, to find a purchaser to renovate Stocken hall, Rutland, as described in a ministerial letter by the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) why his Department, when instructing Messrs. Cluttons to offer Stocken hall for sale, permitted the published offer for sale document to state that the sale would be on the basis that the building should be renovated; at what stage his Department established that such a condition was unenforceable; why the sale was permitted to proceed on such a basis; and what steps were taken by his Department to seek a voluntary contractual agreement with the purchasers which would implement the decision in favour of renovation already taken by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 April 1989]: I will write to my hon. Friend about this case.

Air Pollution

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve stricter regulations on the removal of substances other than lead from exhaust emissions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Strict regulation of emissions of the exhaust gases and particulates from motor vehicles was agreed by European Community Environment Ministers in December 1987. The new limit values, which are contained in a European Community Directive, will be implemented in full in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport expects to consult interested parties shortly on regulations bringing this into effect. A common position was taken by the Community on a farther stage of stricter limits for small car gaseous emissions in November 1988. This has been considered by the European Parliament, who have proposed amendments. It is now for the Commission to re-examine the common position taking into account the Parliament's proposals.

Football Grounds (Arrests)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the total number of arrests in the current season at the ground of each club in divisions one, two, three and four of the Football League; and what were the comparable figures at the same point in 1987-88.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

The most up-to-date figures collected centrally by the Association of Chief Police Officers are up to 31 October 1988. At the end of each football season the ACPO carefully reviews the returns from 43 individual forces relating to the number of arrests made at the 92 Football League clubs. Since the provisional totals have not yet been given a full end of season check, it would be inappropriate to publish a club-by-club breakdown. The available divisional totals are as follows:

Division	1987-88 season to 31 October 1987	1988-89 season to 31 October 1988
2	764	540
4	330	248

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to receive a report and recommendations from the Parliamentary Ombudsman on Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Maude: The handling of an investigation undertaken by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, and the timing of any report which he may make, are matters for the Commissioner.

Inner-city Regeneration

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what support his Department is giving to encourage the Church and Church agencies to become more involved in inner-city regeneration.

Mr. Newton: We have contributed £148,000 to Evangelical Enterprise and £6,000 to Church Action with the Unemployed towards their work for the urban priority areas, and £215,000 to the Church of England Board for Social Responsibility for a linking-up project at Manchester designed to develop church-based projects in inner-city areas. Church-sponsored projects in 10 task force areas have already been helped by task force funding.

We have also established a churches liaison group, which will advise and assist those both of Christian denominations and of other faiths who wish to develop co-ordinated schemes for action in the inner cities.

Cricket Bats

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what investigations his Department has made of the impact of watermark disease on the export potential of the cricket bat manufacturing industry in the east midlands;

(2) what trends his Department anticipates in exports of British cricket bats.

Mr. Atkins: The issue of watermark disease has been raised with me on several occasions. I am advised that the virus is not currently a major threat to stocks of English willow, and I do not expect it adversely to affect the export of British cricket bats. As the hon. Member would expect, however, I am continuing to monitor developments closely.

Monopolies (References)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy on references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Government's policy on references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is stated in a DTI Blue Paper entitled "Mergers Policy", published in March 1988. The main consideration in considering whether to refer a merger to the MMC is the potential effect on competition in the United Kingdom.

Newspapers (Proprietorial Interference)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the Newspaper Publishers Association on proprietorial interference in the publishing of newspapers.

Mr. Maude: None.

Oil Prices

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about allegations of price fixing and collusion between the larger oil companies.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the oil pricing policies of the major oil companies, the ownership and operation of petrol stations and their pricing policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about petrol prices. The wholesale supply of petrol is being investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which is due to report by 8 November this year.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to publish its report on the motor fuel business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 14 April 1989]: The Commission is due to submit its report to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State by 8 November. It will be published as soon as possible after it has been submitted to and considered by my right hon. and noble Friend.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if any changes are planned in the collection of trade statistics after 1992.

Mr. Maude: A proposal for an EC Council regulation, which sets out a revised methodology for the collection of trade statistics between member states of the European Community after 1992 to replace the current procedure based on customs' documentation, has been prepared by the EC Commission and will be considered by EC Ministers over the coming months.

Trade statistics will continue to be collected both for intra-EC trade and for trade with third countries, but the level of detail for commodity classification will be the subject of related legislation and will be discussed by a working party of officials from member states later this year. The Government are seeking to ensure that the collection of these statistics does not impose unnecessary burdens on business involved in trade between member states .

Shipbuilding

Mr. Mullins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many former employees of North East Shipbuilders Limited have found jobs under the British Shipbuilders job creation scheme; and how many of those jobs have lasted for more than one month.

Mr. Newton: As at 7 April 1989, 895 out of a total 1,637 former employees had found new jobs and a further 83 had been placed on retraining courses arranged by Sunderland Enterprise and Training Limited. There is no systematic information about how long jobs so far found have lasted, but only 40 clients of Sunderland Enterprise and Training Limited who had found work have so far returned for further assistance.

Textile Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure the continuation of the current system of national quotas for the multi-fibre arrangement after the introduction of the single European market in 1992;

(2) what estimate has been made by his Department of the impact which would result upon the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries from the possible introduction of a community quota system for the multi-fibre arrangement after the introduction of the single European market in 1992;

(3) what representations he has received and what discussions he is holding with the United Kingdom textile industry with regard to the consequences of the introduction of a community-wide quota system for the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not easy to estimate the impact of the possible phasing out of member states' shares of Community quotas under the multi-fibre arrangement, although I have received a number of representations expressing concern. The report which we have commissioned from Professor Silberston on the multi-fibre arrangement and the United Kingdom economy will address this issue.

The arrangements which will apply after 1992 are not at present determined. The European Commission has taken a general view that individual member states quotas or shares of European Community-wide quotas cannot continue after the introduction of the single European market. How far this will extend to the treatment of textiles and clothing has yet to be settled. The existing Community bilateral agreements with major multi-fibre arrangement textile suppliers already allow for some automatic and increasing transfer between member states of each member state's share of the Community quotas. These arrangements work well. However, the present extension of the multi-fibre arrangement expires in 1991.

The future of the multi-fibre arrangement—and other textiles restrictions—is a matter for negotiation within the current Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations in GATT, which is due to conclude in September 1990. It is still too early to say what the outcome of these negotiations will be.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement outlining the progress which has been made so far in the current Uruguay round of general agreement on tariffs and trade multilateral trade negotiations with regard to the textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The negotiating group on textiles and clothing has yet to enter detailed and substantive negotiations on the "modalities" for the return of the sector to GATT rules. At the mid-term review, which concluded with the meeting of the Trade Negotiations Committee at the beginning of this month, it was reaffirmed that the process of reintegration of the textiles and clothing sector should be on the basis of strengthened GATT rules and disciplines and that the modalities should among other things cover the phasing out of the multi-fibre arrangement and other restrictions inconsistent with GATT, together with the timing and progressive character of the process of integration. The TNC text preserves existing rights and obligations under the present MFA and calls upon all participants to try to improve the trade situation. Lengthy substantive negotiations can now be expected with a view to reaching an agreement within the time frame of the round.

Off-course Racing Information

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Office of Fair Trading is now considering the monopoly position of the bookmaking interests in the transmission of racing information to the off-course market, in the light of the further allocation of equity in Satellite Information Services shortly to be allocated.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 13 April 1989]: I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading is continuing to monitor developments in the off-course bookmaking market under the competition legislation for which he is responsible.

Guinness plc.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how long the inspectors have now been investigating the affairs of Guinness plc; what has been the cost of the investigation to date; when he expects the inspectors to report; and whether the publication of the report will be deferred until all criminal proceedings arising from the Guinness affair have been disposed of.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 13 April 1989]: The inspectors have completed their inquiries, which have cost £1,657,410. Their report will not be published until the criminal proceedings are concluded.

James Ferguson Holdings plc

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how long the inspectors have now been investigating the affairs of James Ferguson Holdings plc; what has been the cost of the investigation to date; when he expects the inspectors to report; and whether the publication of the report will be deferred until all criminal proceedings arising from the Barlow Clowes affair have been disposed of.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Mr. Lawrence David Ziman, solicitor, and Mr. Walter Max Hoffman FCA were appointed on 10 June 1988 under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of James Ferguson Holdings plc. On 4 July 1988, the same inspectors were appointed under section 442 of the Act to investigate and report on the membership of that company and under section 432 to investigate and report on the affairs of Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Limited.

The investigations have cost £669,244 to date. I am unable to say when the inspectors will submit their report. The question of publication will be considered when the report is received.

COCOM

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the enforcement of COCOM rules to take account of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Her Majesty's Government expect to see a considerable reduction in export controls well in advance of 1992, which should encourage the freer movement of goods within the European Community. We are examining the most effective means of streamlining our export controls procedures to achieve this, consistent with the need to continue to safeguard the national interest. This will not directly affect the work of the Co-ordinating Committee (COCOM) which is concerned with strategic export controls on trade with the eastern bloc and the People's Republic of China.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on (a) the progress on discussions to reduce the COCOM, and its period of rotating review and (b) the procedures for enforcement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Her Majesty's Government recognise the vital need to shorten the COCOM control lists to ensure that controls are effective and the support of industry is retained. We are vigorously seeking ways, together with our COCOM partners, to streamline the lists both through the continuous list review procedure, which examines one quarter of the lists each year, and through one-off exercises. Some progress has been achieved, and in 1988, 17 items were partially or wholly removed from the lists and 57 items reduced to lower levels of control. It is difficult in practice to achieve a rapid reduction in the lists, given the requirement for unanimity within COCOM and the need for a strategic re-assessment of any items it is proposed to remove.

We are discussing with our COCOM partners ways of achieving more rapid progress.

Eastbourne Waterworks Company

Mr. Gow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the price increases imposed by the Eastbourne Waterworks Company following the takeover of the company by the French company SAUR S.A., in the light of the information provided to him by the hon. Member for Eastbourne in his letter dated 6 April.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 April 1989]: There are no plans to make a reference.

Nissan

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the export of vehicles manufactured by Nissan UK to the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1989]: My right hon. and noble Friend wrote to Dr. Bangemann, the European Commissioner responsible for industry and the internal market, on 6 March asking him formally to clarify with the French Government that cars produced at Sunderland by Nissan Motor Manufacturing UK Ltd. are allowed to enter France quite independently of the level of car imports into France from Japan. Dr. Bangemann has just replied saying that the Commission has now received a formal assurance from the French Government that this will be the case.

On this basis, Nissan Motor Manufacturing UK Ltd. expects that its business with France will continue unimpeded. We welcome this resolution of the position and look forward to discussions with France and other member states on future policy in the European Community on the range of vehicles issues that will have to be considered in the context of completion of the single market.

Manufacturing Industry (Halifax)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many manufacturing jobs in Halifax have been lost during 1989.

Mr. John Lee: The information requested is not available. My Department's small area statistics monitor net only changes in employment between census of employment dates and the latest available figures are for September 1984. More up-to-date employee estimates for local areas, from the September 1987 census of employment, will become available later this year.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Week

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has made to the Trades Union Congress national health and safety week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Everyone concerned with work—employees and trades unions as well as employers—has a role to play in ensuring high standards of health and safety. Union-appointed safety representatives have an important contribution to make. I welcome the efforts of the TUC to encourage safety representatives to be more active in carrying out their statutory functions.

Palace of Westminster (Health and Safety)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to bring the Palace of Westminister within the Factory and Health and Safety Acts.

Mr. Nicholls: No, I have no such proposals. The authorities of the Palace seek to ensure that the provisions of the Acts are met wherever possible. The Health and Safety Executive has arranged with the Palace authorities for visits to be made to give advice on health and safety matters. Visits may be made on the initiative of either the HSE or the Palace authorities.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the defintion of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Cope: The following table gives the information requested for the calendar year 1988:

	Number	Cost £
Employment Department	19	139,795
Employment Service	70	473,912
Training Agency	20	136,831
Health and Safety Executive	14	106,486
Total	123	857,024

Of these, 25 vehicles were definitely United Kingdom-produced, on the definition, employed by the DTI for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value. A further 95 vehicles comprised models of multinational companies which are manufactured both in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in Europe. It would be possible to determine how many were United Kingdom-produced only by individual inspection of each vehicle.

The selection and purchase of vehicles in the Department is normally restricted to European Community made or assembled vehicles.

Job Clubs

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the number of job clubs, since the start of the intitiative to the most recent date, by year, for the north-west region and for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee: The number of job clubs for north-west region and the rest of Great Britain from the start of the programme in November 1984 to the latest available date is shown in the table.

Date	North West	Great Britain
November 1984	—	2
April 1985	—	4
April 1986	4	29

Date	North West	Great Britain
April 1987	157	991
April 1988	200	1,204
February 1989	207	1,220

Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on what premise closure of 220 employment service job clubs is based;

(2) when he made the decision to close 220 employment service job clubs.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 27 January 1989, Official Report, column 810.

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the advertising and publicity expenditure for the Training Agency for each financial year from 1979 to the present date.

Mr. Cope: The information is given in the table:

Information on budgets for 1988-89 and 1989-90 for spending on general publicity, to include the Training Agency, will be found in table 7.29 on page 25 of the Public Expenditure White Paper, cm. 607, published January 1989. Details of final expenditure for 1988-89 are not yet available. Detailed decisions on expenditure by media group for 1989-90 as requested have not yet been taken.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the advertising and publicity expenditure for his Department for each financial year from 1979 to the present date.

Mr. Cope: The amount spent by the Department of Employment on advertising and publicity in each financial year is as follows:

Year	Amount £ million
1979-80	0·7
1980-81	0·3
1982-83	0·5

[1]This includes expenditure for the Employment Service. Training Agency expenditure is not included.

Skill Centres

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the report of Deloitte Haskins into the efficiency of skill centres.

Mr. Cope: Deloittee, Haskins and Sells reported on the feasibility of moving the Skills Training Agency into the private sector. The report will not be published.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of which skill centres are under-used.

Mr. Cope: Details of the utilisation of individual skill centres are commercially confidential in the context of the private tender sale process.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of what the core business of each skill centre will be following privatisation.

Mr. Cope: We hope that skill centres will become viable businesses that provide good training for both unemployed and employed people.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legally binding guarantees he will obtain in order to secure for the public sector benefit of any windfall gains on sale of assets following skill centre privatisation.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 13 March that he would make provision for the Government to share in any development gains in the years immediately after sale. We shall be receiving professional advise as to the form such provision should take.

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the average weekly earnings of full-time 16-year-old 17-year-old and 18-year-old employees, for each year since 1979 to the present.

Mr. Lee: The information is provided in the table.

Average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees whose earnings were not affected by absence—Great Britain

1979	34·7	40·8	49·8

YTS

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the levels of the 1985 YTS allowance for first and second-year trainees would have been had it risen annually in line with (a) the retail prices index, (b) average earnings and (c) the average yearly rate of inflation.

Mr. Cope: The two-year YTS was introduced in April 1986, at which date the YTS allowances were set at £27·30 per week for first year trainees and £35 per week for second year trainees. If the allowances had been increased in line with changes in the retail price index they would have been £31·25 and £40·07 respectively in February 1989. If adjusted in line with increases in the average earnings index, the allowances would have been £33·57 and £43·04 respectively in January 1989. Adjusting the allowance for the rate of inflation is equivalent to the adjustment made for changes in the retail price index. Many trainees receive more than the minimum level of the trainee allowance.

HEALTH

Eye and Dental Examinations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring of charges for eye and dental examinations his Department is undertaking; and what are the initial results of such monitoring.

Mr. Mellor: There is no charge for NHS sight tests. We shall be monitoring the position in respect of private tests in the autumn. Concerning the dental examination, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 6 March to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) at column 421.

Inspectors of Anatomy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of anatomy are in post; how many vacant posts there are; what is the position in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement on the qualifications for this post.

Mr. Mellor: Her Majesty's inspector of anatomy is appointed for the inspection and licencing of premises for anatomical examination in England, Scotland and Wales.

The appointment is made on the basis of the recommendation of the chief medical officers for the aforementioned countries.

Mental Illness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funds have been specifically earmarked for the care of the mentally ill following the closure of mental hospitals in (a) the current and (b) each of the last two years in each health region;

(2) on what information about mental health his Department has allocated funds to regional health authorities in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: For the most part, allocations to regional health authorities do not make separate provision for individual clinical services or client groups. It is for authorities to determine how the resources available to them should be spent in line with national policy guidelines and their assessment of local needs and priorities.

A total of £6 million has, however, been made available over the last three years specifically for mental illness development projects in the community. The aim of this initiative has been to establish or improve multidisciplinary community-based services for people with mental illness, especially adults suffering from serious disorders. Regional shares of these funds are shown in the table.

Additionally, joint finance is available to support the development of community services planned jointly by health and local authorities and the voluntary sector and to promote the shift from hospital to community care. The total joint finance allocation to regions in each of the last three years has been:

Year	£ million cash
1988-89	112·9
1989-90	118·5

Some two thirds of these allocations have been or will be spent on services for mentally handicapped, mentally ill and younger physically disabled people.

Mental Handicap and Illness

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his best estimate of the numbers of people with (a) mental handicaps and (b) mental illness who are aged 65 years and over; and what advice on services and other provisions for these groups his Department gives to health and local authorities.

Mr. Freeman: We have no basis upon which to estimate the prevalence of mental illness or mental handicap, neither of which is a well defined term, among the estimated 7·4 million people aged 65 years or more. I can say that at 31 December 1986, the latest date for which figures are available centrally, the number of people aged 65 years or more in NHS hospitals and units in England was as follows:

	Number
(a) Mental Handicap hospitals, units and community units	5,552
(b) Mental illness hospitals and units	34,341

In recent years we have issued the following relevant guidance, copies of which are in the Library.
DHSS Study Team Report "Helping Mentally Handicapped People with Special Problems".
Health Advisory Service Report "The Rising Tide".
Government Response to the Second Report from the Social Services Committee Cmnd. No. 9674.

Hospices

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to complete his review into the funding of hospices.

Mr. Mellor: I expect to complete the review shortly.

Trainee Nurses

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainees have entered nursing for a state registered nurse or registered general nurse course in England and Wales for each of the last three years.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Numbers entering registered general nurse training England: years ending 31 March

Project 2000

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the pilot areas chosen for Project 2000.

Mr. Mellor: Discussions are currently taking place with the 13 selected demonstration districts on the manpower and financial aspects of their proposals. Following these discussions financial allocations will be made.

Health Authorities (Surplus Land and Buildings)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the proceeds of surplus land and buildings disposed of by health authorities since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply by my hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 19 December 1988 at columns 131-34. Figures for 1988-89 are not yet available.

Hospitals (Cleaning Contracts)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the occasions since the award of private cleaning contracts at the Kent and Canterbury hospital, the Thanet district hospital and the royal seabathing hospital upon which payments for specific cleaning areas have been suspended.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of Canterbury and Thanet health authority to obtain the information requested.

Cot Deaths

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the major causes of sudden infant death syndrome.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the report of what I said during the Adjournment debate of 20 March at columns 885-90.

Mr. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research projects into cot deaths funded by his Department and their cost since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: A full list of research directly funded by the Department of Health since 1979 which may be relevant to cot deaths is not readily available. The Department did however fund a major study specifically into cot deaths, co-ordinated by Professor Knowelden of the medical care research unit at Sheffield university, for the period 1976 to 1985. The total cost, including sponsorship of a seminar to facilitate dissemination of the findings, was around £285,000.

The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. For current MRC research relevant to cot deaths I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 20 February at columns 524-25.

Mr. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have died in each year since 1979 from sudden infant death syndrome.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table, which gives the number of deaths registered at age under one year with any mention of sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), cot death or similar term irrespective of whether or not it was assigned as underlying cause of death.

Number of deaths registered under one year of age with any mention of sudden infant death on the death certificate, England and Wales 1979-80[1]

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 14 March, Official Report, column 162, in what foods the thermo-tolerance of listeria has been studied.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The foods used as a base for the research referred to in my reply to the hon. Member on 14

March at column 162 were cooked beef, chicken and carrots, chosen to provide an across the board sample of texture and density of food commonly used in cook-chill catering systems.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 14 March, Official Report, column 162, what conclusions were reached during tests as to the length of time specific temperatures must be maintained during the heating and reheating of cook-chill food in order to destroy listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The authors of the research concluded that a temperature of 70°C for two minutes at the slowest heating point of the food was required for the effective decontamination of listeria monocytogenes.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Freeman: Only 5 per cent. of the vehicles purchased in 1988 for the then Department of Health and Social Security were for the use of Department of Health staff and some 60 per cent. of all DHSS vehicles purchased in that year were United Kingdom produced on the definition employed by the DTI for statistical purposes under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works price.

Information in the form requested in respect of the purchase of NHS vehicles is not available centrally. This is a matter for each regional and district health authority. The total value of vehicles purchased in the NHS in 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, was £22·371 million.

Social Workers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of social workers employed by local authorities, on (a) unpaid leave of absence and (b) paid leave of absence, to undertake activities as councillors in neighbouring local authorities.

Mr. Mellor: None.

Homelessness

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for the number of children in care because of family homelessness.

Mr. Mellor: A child may be taken into care for a number of reasons of which homelessness may be a contributory factor, although not identified as a specific cause in the statistics.

Provisional figures show that there were 420 children in care in England at 31 March 1987 where the specific cause was that their family was homeless.

District Health Authorities (General Managers)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the pay gradings of each district health authority general manager in the Yorkshire region.

Mr. Mellor: The gradings of district general manager posts in the Yorkshire region, and the salary grade rates from 1 September 1988, are set out in the table. In addition, district general managers are eligible for a discretionary addition of up to 10 per cent. of the grade rate (to reflect differences in job weight) and performance related pay. Details of the performance-related pay awarded to individual general managers are confidential between them and their employer.

Grade	Grade rate at 1 September 1988 (£)	Districts
1	37,110	Leeds Western Leeds Eastern Bradford
2	35,450	Hull York East Yorkshire Huddersfield Wakefield Calderdale
3	33,790	Scunthorpe Dewsbury Grimsby Harrogate Airedale Pontefract Northallerton

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will consider recognising the diploma of medical secretaries as a basis for proficiency awards;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce a separate salary scale for medical secretaries;

(3) what are the current pay scales for each area health authority for medical secretaries.

Mr. Mellor: Pay and conditions of service for medical secretaries in the NHS are matters for negotiation in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council. Medical secretaries are employed in various grades with basic annual pay scales for adults ranging from £5,059 to £9,440. London weighting of up to £1,267 is payable in addition. The grading of posts, according to their particular responsibilities, is a matter for individual employing authorities. Additional allowances of up to £667 may be payable for tested proficiency in typing, shorthand and audio skills. The qualifications recognised for automatic entitlement to proficiency allowances which do not include the diploma of the Association of Medical Secretaries, Practice Administrators and Receptionists are also determined by the Whitley council. Negotiations are continuing in the council on proposals for changes in the pay and grading structures of all administrative and clerical staff.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each health authority paid in the latest year for which figures are available in agencies fees for personnel to cover medical secretary duties.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

NHS Reform

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will summarise, and place in the Library, the reactions he has received from general practitioner, consultant and nurses organisations to the proposed reform of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have already received a wide range of comments from many people but I expect many more. I will take them fully into account as the process of implementation goes forward. All the organisations have taken steps to publicise their reactions and I see little useful purpose in my summarising their views on which I am sure the Library is well placed to brief the right hon. Member.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to treat general practitioners who volunteer for budgets as running a demonstration project and ensure that the proposed reforms are only a framework, not immutable.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are currently considering the detailed operation of the practice budget scheme so that the first practices can have their budgets from April 1991 onwards. We will of course then keep the system under review and make any improvements which are necessary in the light of experience.

Hospitals (Opting Out)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reactions he has received from the first six hospitals which were expected to opt out of health authority control.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have never had expectations about which hospitals, from the many potential candidates, will be among the first applicants for self-governing status. Some recent reports to the contrary were based on the mistaken belief that the first six hospitals involved in the development of the resource management initiative were automatically expected to choose self-government. The chief executive of the National Health Service management board has asked regional health authorities to forward expressions of interest in self-government to the Department by 31 May.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on payments made to each member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 28 November 1988 at columns 149-50.

Mowbray Grange Hospital, Bedale

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce a decision about the future of Mowbray Grange hospital, Bedale.

Mr. Freeman: Proposals such as this need careful consideration. I do however expect to be able to announce a decision shortly.

Doctors (Investigations)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests he received from family practitioner committees to approve out-of-time investigations into allegations involving one or more doctors in 1988.

Mr. Mellor: Forty four.

Young People (Care)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to local authority social services departments concerning support for 17-year-old young people leaving care.

Mr. Mellor: The powers and duties of local authorities for children leaving care are set out in sections 27 to 29 of the Child Care Act 1980.

For the past six years the Department has given a grant to the voluntary organisation First Key to enable it to promote effective planning by local authorities for young people leaving care and to develop good practice, through consultancy work with individual local authorities and through conferences and publications.

Proposals to extend and enhance the powers and duties of local authorities for children leaving care are contained in clause 20 of the Children Bill now before the House. If agreed, it is intended that a detailed circular of guidance will be issued to local authorities on implementation of the provisions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rating Reform

1. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates the take-up of rebates on the community charge will be.

7. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates the take-up of rebates on the community charge will be.

17. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates will be the take-up of rebates on the community charge.

35. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates will be the take-up of rebates on the community charge.

37. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he anticipates will be the take-up of rebates on the community charge.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We expect just over 11 million people to receive community charge benefits when the scheme is fully in place throughout Great Britain.

Housing Benefit

9. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had recently with local authorities on housing benefit.

19. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had recently with local authorities on housing benefit.

26. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had recently with local authorities on housing benefits.

29. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had recently with local authorities on housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department has regular meetings with the local authority associations throughout the year to discuss housing benefit and we consult them formally on proposals for regulations.

Family Credit

11. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate for the number of households eligible for family credit in Wales; and what number of households are receiving family credit in Wales.

Mr. Moore: We do not have separate figures of eligibility for Wales. About 20,000 families in Wales were actually receiving family credit at the end of January. This compares with 14,000 families who received family income support supplement under the old scheme.

16. Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he anticipates that the number of awards of family credit will reach 470,000.

24. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he anticipates that the number of awards of family credit will reach 470,000.

47. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, when he anticipates that the number of awards of family credit will reach 470,000.

Mr. Moore: Since family credit began last April, more than 650,000 awards have been made.

22. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of family credit recipients are receiving £30 or more.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of February, more than 35 per cent. of family credit recipients were receiving £30 or more per week. Awards are made for 26 weeks, so these families are guaranteed at least £780, tax free, over the six months. This confirms that the families who are most in need of family credit are already claiming. But we recognise that there are still many families who are not aware that they may be eligible. That is why we have just begun our major advertising campaign.

39. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of family credit recipients are receiving £20 per week or more.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of February, about 60 per cent. of family credit recipients were receiving £20 or more per week.

52. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average award made to recipients of family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest information on family credit is derived from an examination of amounts in payment at the end of February 1989; this indicated that the average amount in payment at that time was around £25 a week.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the simplified family credit form (FC1) to be issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The new version of claim form FC1 is already available in local social security offices. Stocks are being distributed by the Post Office and should be available in their offices within the next few days. Claims for family credit will continue to be accepted on the old style forms.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated take-up of family credit during 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The percentage take-up of family credit in 1989-90 will not be known until information from the 1989 family expenditure survey is available.

Pensioners (Earnings Rule)

17. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is being done to encourage older people to carry on working.

Mr. Scott: From 1 October the pensioners' earnings rule is to be abolished so that pensioners will receive automatically their full state retirement pension, to which they are entitled, regardless of their earnings. This will increase choice and flexibility for people over pension age who wish to work.

25. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the pensioners' earnings rule will be abolished.

Mr. Scott: From 1 October 1989.

34. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is being done to give more choice and flexibility for older people who want to carry on working.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Older people who wish to carry on working will have more choice and flexibility from 1 October 1989 when the earnings rule for pensioners is to be abolished. Pensioners will be able to go on working without having their state pension reduced and will no longer be barred from receiving a full pension if they work more than 12 hours a week. It will still be possible for people to defer drawing their pension for up to five years after pension age, thus increasing their entitlement by about 7·5 per cent. for each year of deferment.

45. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are currently estimated to be earning in excess of £75 per week and are subject to pension reduction or abatement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Approximately 2,500 individuals currently have their pensions reduced as a result of the pensioners' earnings rule, which is to be abolished from 1 October 1989.

Child Benefit

18. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next plans to review the level of child benefit.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend is required to review the level of child benefit each year, and he does this as part of his annual review of benefit rates. He will announce his decision to the House in the usual way in the autumn.

23. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of take-up of child benefit.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated to be 98 per cent.

Income Support

20. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for the full uprating of income support for claimants in receipt of transitional additions.

36. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for the full uprating of income support for claimants in receipt of transitional additions.

42. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for the full uprating of income support for claimants in receipt of transitional additions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The income support payable to all but a small number of claimants was uprated last week. We have no plans to change the rules for uprating.

Attendance Allowance

21. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase the level of payment and take-up of constant attendant allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 6 March at column 449 and my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 January at column 574.

Widows' Benefit

28. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing in response to the ruling made by the Social Security Commissioner on 28 February in respect of widows' benefit.

Mr. Scott: The women affected by the commissioner's decision have been identified and are being paid. Any widow who thinks she may be affected and has not been contacted should approach her local social security office.

Retirement Pensions

30. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the weekly state retirement pension for a single person following the recent uprating; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 10 April the full weekly rate of state retirement pension is £43·60 for a single pensioner, and £69·80 for a pensioner couple. In November 1979 the full weekly rate was £23·30 for a single pensioner, and £37·30 for a pensioner couple.

National Insurance

31. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the proposed changes in employees' national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received only one representation.

40. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the effects of the recently announced changes in national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The reform of national insurance contributions announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget Statement on 14 March builds on the system of reduced rate contributions for lower paid employees which was introduced in 1985. As at present, people earning less than £43 a week will not pay contributions. From October 1989, however, employees earning £43 a week or more will pay a contribution made up of 2 per cent. of the first £43 of earnings and the standard 9 per cent. (7 per cent. for employees contracted out of SERPS) on the balance of earnings up to the upper earnings limit, currently £325 a week.

These changes are a major reform of the way in which employees' contributions are determined. They will remove two of the three steps in the national insurance system which can result in pay increases being more than offset by higher contributions, leaving the employee worse off. And the first step, when people start paying contributions, will be more than halved.

50. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will be affected by the reform in the way in which employees' contributions are determined.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government Actuary's Department estimates that during the second half of the 1989-90 financial year a weekly average of about 19 million people in Great Britain will be affected by the change in the structure of employees' national insurance contributions. Of these, about 15 million will gain £3 a week.

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the changes to be made in employees' national insurance contributions will take effect.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From the tax week which begins on Thursday 5 October 1989.

Women's Refuges

32. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received recently on proposed changes to funding for women's refuges.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of hon. Members, organisations and members of the public have made representations echoing those made by organisations representing women's refuges mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member on 23 January at columns 417-18.

Benefits

33. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average annual expenditure in benefit payment, per capita, in the last financial year for (a) registered disabled people of working age who were unemployed and (b) people with no known disability of working age who were unemployed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many supplementary benefit payments under the urgent cases regulations were awarded in the period

(a) April 1985 to March 1986 inclusive, (b) April 1986 to March 1987 inclusive, and (c) April 1987 to March 1988 inclusive in respect of each Department of Social Security local office of Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool; and what were the amounts awarded from each office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of successful claims made under the urgent cases provisions is in the table. I regret that information on the total amount awarded for each office is not available.

	Statistical years (April to April)
	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single payments were awarded in the period (a) April 1985 to March 1986 inclusive, (b) April 1986 to March 1987 inclusive, and (c) April 1987 to March 1988 inclusive in respect of each Department of Social Security local office of Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool; and what were the amounts awarded from each office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers and total values of supplementary benefit single payments made by all offices of the Department for the periods in question is in the Library.

War Widows

38. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's future proposals for war widows.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The standard basic rate of tax-free war widow's pension, which is 30 per cent. higher than the taxable national insurance widow's pension, was increased from £53·50 to £56·65 a week from 10 April 1989. On top of that, age allowances are paid of £6·10 at age 65, £12·20 at 70 and £15·30 at 80, and 85 per cent. of war widows receive an age allowance. War widows may also receive a retirement pension if they worked and paid contributions, and it is estimated that about 75 per cent. do. War widows with children receive an addition of £12·60 a week for each child and may also receive a rent allowance of up to £21·55 a week and an education allowance of up to £120 a year. It is proposed to maintain these very preferential provisions for war widows.

Community Care

41. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what aspects of entitlement to community care grants he has under review.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None at present, but we are continuing to monitor closely the operation of the social fund and have recently commissioned independent research into the extent to which it is meeting its objectives. We have taken a number of steps to improve local awareness and understanding of community care grants and are currently considering what additional measures might be taken to improve national information on the scheme. We shall also shortly be issuing revised guidance to social fund officers in the social fund manual.

Unemployment Benefits

43. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of social security benefit expenditure in 1988-89 was devoted to unemployed people; and what were the comparable figures for the previous two years.

Mr. Scott: The latest estimate is that benefits for unemployed people were about 12 per cent. of total social security benefit expenditure in 1988-89, compared with over 16 per cent. in 1986-87 and about 14 per cent. in 1987-88.

Carers

44. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his future plans for the welfare of people looking after relations.

Mr. Scott: We shall look at invalid care allowance in the light of the results of the OPCS surveys of disability, together with benefits for disabled people themselves.

Pensioners (Incomes)

46. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners were in the lowest fifth of the national income distribution in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1979, 38 per cent. of pensioners tax units[1] were in the lowest fifth of the national income distribution. By 1986 this figure had fallen to 24 per cent.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is a single person of pensionable age or a couple where the man is of pensionable age.

Child Maintenance

48. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the percentage of divorced and separated men who do not contribute towards the maintenance of their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This Department does not hold information in the form requested. The information we have relates only to maintenance paid for lone parent families receiving income support (formerly supplementary benefit), of whom 95 per cent. are lone mothers. The most recent figures available are for May 1987 and show that fathers were not paying maintenance for children in about 60 per cent. of the cases involving divorced mothers and about 70 per cent. of cases involving separated mothers. The Government are naturally concerned by these figures.

Attendance Allowance

49. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the availability of attendance allowance to the carers of children under the age of two years who suffer severe disability.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 22 February at column 682.

Young People

51. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he is doing to help young people who are experiencing particular difficulty in living independently.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 13 March, at columns 27-8.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that no young person in Stoke on Trent North will be evicted as a direct result of the benefit changes on 10 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The principal aim of the reform of income support for people living in board and lodging accommodation is to put this group on a par with the majority of households who look to the housing benefit scheme for help with accommodation costs and income support for help with other necessities. The new arrangements therefore take a substantial step towards making the social security system neutral as to accommodation type, thereby removing perverse incentives for both claimants and landlords towards particular kinds of housing. Help with any reasonable lodging charge is available through housing benefit. For the majority of boarders, transitional arrangements are in place to make good any shortfall between the new and old levels of benefit for up to three months. The Government believe that these arrangements give sufficient time for both claimants and landlords to adapt to the new benefit rules.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables, similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing the calculation of net weekly spending power of each of the following (i) a 16-year-old person on first year YTS, (ii) a 17-year-old person on second year YTS and (iii) a 17-year-old person leaving care and not on a YTS scheme, both under the existing system for paying board and lodging and under the proposed system from April, and in all tables working on the following assumptions: that the persons have no parents and must live independently in the Redcar Department of Social Security ILO area (a) in full board accommodation, occupying one room costing £55 per week, (b) in bed, breakfast and evening meal accommodation, occupying one room costing £44 per week and (c) in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, occupying one room costing £33 per week that in all cases the young person incurs a travelling cost to and from YTS, of £2·50 per week and that the rent and rates element of the charge consists of £23 rent, £4 general rates, £1 water rates and charges of £1 for laundry and £1 for cleaning; and in each case, if he will indicate the items and services which remain to be met by the individual out of their net weekly income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 April 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

Footnotes:

[1] The tables show figures calculated on the [redacted] that the same individual is claiming benefit in both March and April 1989.

[2] To protect people who would receive less benefit overall as a result of the change in benefit rules, transitional protection is provided as follows:

Long-term protection: for people in supported lodgings who receive care and support from the landlord.
Up to 52 weeks: for families in hotels who are not sponsored by a local authority.
Up to 13 weeks: for any other person on YTS or ET, or aged 25 or over, or a vulnerable person aged under 25.
No protection: for fit, unemployed people aged under 25 who were previously subject to time limits.

[3] Actual housing benefit entitlement would be calculated by the local authority by deducting from the overall changes given, of £55, £44 or £33, the appropriate amounts in respect of meals, fuel and other ineligible items to arrive at the eligible rent, which they may then restrict if they consider it to be unreasonably high. The actual eligible rent could accordingly be higher than the £23 suggested resulting in a higher level of housing benefit payable.

For the purposes of these tables, housing benefit entitlement has however been calculated on the basis of the suggested rent of £23 (which it is assumed does not include the charges for water, laundry, cleaning, or any other ineligible items), and eligible rates of £3·20 (£4 less 20 per cent.).

[4] Disposable income has been calculated by deducting the following expenses from the gross income of income support, housing benefit and YTS allowance (as appropriate):

— Overall charge of £55, £44 or £33 respectively;
— Travel expenses of £2·50 (for YTS participants).

[5] It has been assumed that the individual

a. is eligible for income support under regulation 13A of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987; and
b. was exempt from board and lodging time limits by virtue of paragraph 16(4) of schedule 5 of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987, which was in force immediately prior to 10 April 1989.

Conductive Education

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the Minister of State for Social Security visited the Peto Institute for conductive education in Hungary.

Mr. Scott: I visited the Peto Institute for conductive education in Budapest on 19 September 1988 and on 20 September 1988 I visited the institute's outstation at Kiskunhalas.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the Minister of State for Social Security and the Disabled has associated the Government with the appeal for the launch of an international foundation for conductive education; and what funds have been allocated so far.

Mr. Scott: I sent a message to the Hungarian Government on the occasion of the launch of the appeal for the international foundation for conductive education on 14 March expressing support for the appeal and the hope that the United Kingdom would be able to be involved in the development of the international foundation. Discussions are still in progress about possible funding, and no sum has yet been offered.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the occasions on which the Minister of State for Social Security and the Disabled has had meetings with Ministers in other countries to discuss the appeal for the launch of an international foundation for conductive education; and what was the outcome of those discussions.

Mr. Scott: During a visit to Hungary from 18 to 21 September 1988, I learned of plans for an international foundation for conductive education, in the course of discussions with Hungarian Ministers. Conductive education was also discussed at the visit to the United Kingdom of the Hungarian Minister of Health in October 1988. A formal invitation to participate in developing an international foundation for conductive education was not, however, received until December 1988. I have not discussed this matter with overseas Ministers in person since then, but I met an official delegation from the Hungarian Government on 17 January to discuss the plan in greater detail, and I sent a message to the Hungarian Deputy Prime Minister at the launch of the international appeal for funds for the new institute.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vehicles, and of what value, were purchased by (a) his Department and (b) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 182 vehicles were purchased in 1988 at a cost of £1·3 million, for use on matters connected with social security.

Of these vehicles 173 were United Kingdom-produced, on the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value.

Elderly People (Residential Care)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what arrangements he is making to accommodate those former elderly residents of private residential homes displaced as a result of the failure to uprate the maximum level of support to cover the cost of keeping such elderly people in private homes;

(2) what is the estimate of the number of elderly people with little or no savings who will be unable to continue to live in private residential homes as a result of the failure to uprate the maximum level of support to cover the cost of keeping such elderly people in private homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no evidence to show that people are being displaced from homes. The Department continues to provide significant cash help to people who choose to go into residential care, to help them meet their fees. We aim to assist people to pay reasonable charges.

From this month we are providing extra help to nearly nine out of ten people who claim income support in residential care and nursing homes.

Benefit Deductions

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the contents of his recent circular to his Department's offices on the amount to be left to the claimant after deducting unpaid poll tax; and on what authority this instruction was given.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars) on 14 April at column 743.

Boundary Changes

Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider the effects of recent boundary changes on the social fund allocations for Havant and Portsmouth South local offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The effects of an earlier boundary change have been reassessed and as a consequence the budgets for both Havant and Portsmouth South local offices have been revised from 1 April 1989. The revised figures are:

	Loans	Grants	Per head of caseload
Havant	188,253	77,732	40·40
Portsmouth South	184,749	79,454	30·60

Transitional Payments

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long, on average, claimants wait after submitting a claim for a transitional payment to the transitional payment unit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 13 April at column 685.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Healthy Food

63. Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will review his policy on the case of low cholesterol and healthy food to be served in all canteens at the House of Commons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Wakeham: I have no plans to do so at present. The Refreshment Department is aware of the need to promote the use of low cholesterol and healthy foods as far as is compatible with meeting the overal demands of Members and staff.

Ten-Minute Bills

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to end the current procedure of queuing for ten-minute Bills, and to institute a sytem of ballots which limits hon. Members to one Bill per Parliament.

Mr. Wakeham: Discussions have been taking place through the usual channels about possible changes in the arrangements for giving notice of ten-minute Bills. I have also asked the Select Committee on Procedure for its opinion, but I am not yet in a position to bring forward any proposals.

Refreshment Department Staff (Facilities)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if the Commission has any plans to improve rest room and changing facilities for Refreshment Department staff.

Mr. Beith: Action has already been taken by the Services Committee to improve rest and changing facilities for Refreshment Department staff and a contingency plan exists for making additional accommodation available should a further need be identified by the General Manager of the Refreshment Department, whose responsibility it is in the first instance to determine the precise nature of his Department's requirements.

SCOTLAND

Food Poisoning (Prisons)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any recent representations from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities about food poisoning in prisons and remand centres; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities wrote to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on 9 March. In its letter, COSLA referred to two outbreaks of food poisoning at Longriggend remand centre and urged that steps be taken to remove Crown immunity. A number of right hon. and hon. Members have since written to colleagues and myself on the matter.

The subject of Crown immunity in the area of food hygiene is one which is being considered in the current review of food legislation. Meanwhile, the Government take very seriously any matter of health and hygiene within penal establishments in general and kitchen areas in particular.

In the two cases referred to by COSLA, the environmental health officers from Monklands district council were immediately invited to help trace the source of the infection. In the light of the advice given by them, improvements in the kitchen have been carried out.

Scottish Community Education Council

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to further develop the Scottish Community Education Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In January 1989, we approved the council's corporate plan setting out its major priorities for the next three years as adult basic education; work with young people; adult and continuing education; and training for community education providers. It is open to the Council to propose changes to its priorities. Further development will depend to a large extent on the council's ability to generate income from its activities.

Constituency Boundaries

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the redistribution of constituencies in Scotland; what is the average electorate of constituencies in Scotland; and when the Constituency Boundary Commission will next report upon constituencies in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no proposals for the redistribution of constituencies in Scotland. It is the statutory duty of the Boundary Commission for Scotland to submit proposals to him every 10 to 15 years. The commission's next report must be submitted between February 1993 and February 1998. The average electorate of constituencies in Scotland is 54,624.

Registers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he holds about the use made of electoral registers in the compiling of the community charge registers currently operating in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Section 17(2) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988, provides that community charges registration officers shall, for the purpose of discharging their functions, have access to and the use of any information which electoral registration officers for their areas may have acquired in connection with any of their functions. In Scotland the community charges registration officers are also the electoral registration officers. I have no information about the uses made of electoral registers by individual community charges registration officers.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) the Highlands and Islands Development Board, (c) the Scottish Development Agency, (d) the Forestry Commission, (e) the police and fire services, (f) local authorities and (g) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Rifkind: The number and value of vehicles purchased by the Scottish Office, the Highlands and Islands Development Board, the Scottish Development Agency, the Forestry Commission and other public sector agencies for which I am responsible, is set out in the table.

Department	Number	Value (£)
The Scottish Office	119	932,532
Highlands and Islands Development Board	1	18,537
Scottish Development Agency	7	63,708
Forestry Commission[1]	68	448,642
Other Public Sector Agencies	50	406,899

Of these vehicles, 226 were United Kingdom-produced on the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom context exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value.

Information on the number and value of vehicles purchased for the police/fire services and local authorities is not held centrally and cannot be obtained without disproportionate costs.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications of the intended closure in June of the Dundee operation of the artificial limb manufacturers Robert Kellie and Son Ltd. on the services provided by the limb-fitting centre in Broughty Ferry, Dundee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Although Robert Kellie and Son Ltd. formerly supplied all artificial lower limbs provided by the limb fitting centre in Broughty Ferry, Dundee, the firm declined to tender for the contract which started on 1

January 1989 and now supplies only conventional metal limbs (on sub-contract to the main supplier of lower limbs to the centre). These metal limbs are no longer prescribed for new amputees, who are fitted with modular limbs of a more modern design. Many other amputees are changing to modular limbs. But it is important that conventional metal limbs should be available for the diminishing number of patients who need them. Arrangements will therefore be made, before the intended closure of Robert Kellie and Son Ltd., to find another source of suitable limbs.

Interception of Communications

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the illegal interception of communications in Helensburgh; and if he will bring forward further legislation to prevent such incidents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One. The interception of communications is subject to the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

Employment Training

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy that present Training Agency policies on health and safety, equal opportunities for people with disabilities and ethnic minorities will continue through local agencies and Scottish Enterprise;

(2) what arrangements through local agencies and Scottish Enterprise will be put in place to ensure (a) people with learning difficulties and (b) the long-term unemployed will be effectively catered for;

(3) what arrangements will apply to ensure that private employers on local agencies boards will not have vested interests in the local agencies' expenditure decisions;

(4) what arrangements he proposes for independent monitoring of (a) the quality of Scottish Enterprise delivered training and outturns and (b) local agency delivered training and outturns;

(5) whether civil servants on secondment to local agencies or Scottish Enterprise will be able to alert Ministers to any financial irregularities that they find in (a) local agencies, (b) Scottish Enterprise, (c) contracts training providers and (d) other contracts;

(6) what arrangements he intends to introduce to ensure that quality training is provided by local agencies;

(7) if he will make it his policy that the employment rehabilitation service in Scotland will remain as part of the United Kingdom employment rehabilitation service run through the Training Agency.

Mr. Lang: We are currently reassessing the proposals in the Scottish Enterprise White Paper in the light of all the responses received, and will announce our detailed decisions in due course.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money was spent on the bill-board advertisement covering Sainsbury's plc participation in the employment training scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Employment Training bill-board campaign featuring Sainsburys, IBM and Wimpey ran throughout Great Britain in January and March. The cost of £660,000 cannot be broken down to attribute expenditure to Scotland or to individual companies.

Brook Street Bureau

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what experience the Brook Street Bureau has of providing services for long-term unemployed in areas similar to Ferguslie Park, Paisley.

Mr. Lang: Brook Street has experience of providing job placements for a wide range of clients.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will provide details of the amount of public money paid to fund the private initiative in the Ferguslie Park area of Paisley by the Brook Street Bureau;

(2) if he will provide details of the contract between his Department and the Brook Street Bureau for the provision of employment services in Ferguslie Park, Paisley.

Mr. Lang: Brook Street will be entering into a contract with the Scottish Development Agency in connection with the provision of job placement services for the Ferguslie Park training, employment and enterprise development company which is being set up by the Ferguslie Park partnership, implementing the joint strategy for the regeneration of Ferguslie Park. The details of that contract are commercially confidential; payments are related directly to the number of residents placed in work, and the majority of Brook Street's income will come not from the public sector but from employers' placement fees.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what parts of the employment service his Department fails to provide and Brook Street Bureau will fulfil;

(2) whether the Ferguslie Park decision has any implications for the future of the employment service on a local and national basis.

Mr. Lang: The future of the employment service is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. The job placement services offered by Brook Street as part of the Ferguslie Park training, employment and enterprise development company will complement those provided by the employment service.

Area Manpower Boards

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the possible and actual attendance of the private sector representatives on area manpower boards, for each area manpower board, for the last full year that those boards were in operation.

Mr. Lang: Details of attendance by private sector representatives on area manpower boards from October 1987 to September 1988 are as follows:

	Possible	Actual
Central and Fife	50	27
Highlands and Islands	55	38
Grampian and Tayside	53	33
Lothian and Borders	55	26
Dumfries and Galloway	60	24
Ayrshire	55	26
Glasgow	60	36
Lanarkshire	60	31
Renfrewshire, Dunbartonshire and Argyll	66	30

YTS

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether YTS trainees, currently aged over 18 years, who stay at home receive any additional payment to cover their 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge.

Mr. Lang: YTS trainees who are 18 years old or over will be eligible to apply for a rebate on the full community charge, up to a maximum of 80 per cent., depending on their income and personal circumstances. YTS allowances have not been increased to take account of the community charge.

Training and Employment Grant Scheme

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Development Agency, and when his Department will be in a position to publish conclusions, on a revised training and employment grant scheme for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency has submitted for approval proposals for the implementation of a revised training and employment grant scheme. My officials are considering and evaluating the proposals with agency staff. I will shortly be in a position to decide whether the new scheme should be implemented. The TEGS 8 scheme, which was due to end on 31 March, is continuing to operate in the meantime.

Storm Damage

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to make an announcement on compensation for storm damage to be paid to Scottish local authorities and others.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend wrote to Highland regional and Inverness district councils on 10 February requesting detailed reports of flood damage and extra costs incurred. Highland region replied on 6 March and Inverness district on 6 April. All district councils were asked to report costs incurred in dealing with the effects of the storm on housing. The information received from these and other sources is now being assessed. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make a statement shortly.

Tobacco (Sales to Children)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to take any further steps to enforce section 2 of the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 in relation to the sale of individual cigarettes to young people under the age of 16 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The enforcement of the law is a matter for the police. Chief constables in determining the deployment of resources to combat any particular problem have regard to the overall policing needs of their areas.

Scottish Homes Leaflet

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the factual inaccuracies contained in the leaflet, "Introducing Scottish Homes: Your New Landlord"; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that tenants receive correct information.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 April 1989]: I have already conveyed to Scottish Homes the importance which I attach to the provision of comprehensive and accurate information to tenants. It is the responsibility of Scottish Homes to satisfy itself as to the factual accuracy of its own material. I shall, however, pass to the chairman of Scottish Homes any comments about the leaflet which the hon. Member may care to draw to my attention.

Health Boards (Membership)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the names of members of the Highland health board and the date of appointment and nominating body of each member.

Farmers' Income

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers in Scotland received annual incomes from farming of (a) less than £4,999, (b) £5,000 to £7,499, (c) £7,500 to £9,999, (d) £10,000 to £14,999, (e) £15,000 to £19,999 and (f) over £20,000, respectively, for the latest convenient year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 April 1989]: The information set out in the table for 1987-88 approximates as closely as possible to the income ranges for which information is sought and is estimated from a sample of accounts covering most types of full-time farm. The sample does not cover intensive and mixed farms and a small number of very large farms is also excluded.

Net farm income range £	Number of farms
less than 5,000	6,600
5,000 to 6,999	1,400
7,000 to 9,999	2,500
10,000 to 14,999	1,900
15,000 to 19,999	1,500
20,000 and over	3,000

Net farm income is the reward to the farmer and his wife for their manual work and for running the farm, and the return on their investment in stock and machinery.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest available estimate of the income per agriculture holding in Scotland (a) including non-agricultural income and (b) excluding such income.

Mr. Rifkind: Information about non-agricultural income is available only from a one per cent. sample of the tax records of individuals registered as having a self-employment income from agriculture and horticulture. For the 1985-86 assessment year, the latest available, the average total income per farmer was £11,845, and the average agricultural and horticultural income was £6,368.

ENVIRONMENT

River Conservation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to ensure that the national freshwater quality classification scheme will consider the conservation status of rivers, in terms of their ability to support and maintain aquatic plant and animal communities.

Mr. Howard: The existing classification schemes for rivers and estuaries are currently under review and my right hon. Friend will be publishing a consultation paper on possible revisions later in the spring. The paper will address the ability of watercourses to support aquatic flora and fauna.

Pollution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain a copy of "Pollution-Controlling the Problems" and "Nuclear Waste and Radiation Risks" recently published by the Association of District Councils for his departmental library; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Copies of these two reports are in the Department's library. We have taken note of their contents.

Pyrton Depot Site

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the residual land on the depot site in the parish of Pyrton in Oxfordshire is surplus to the Crown's requirements; and what plans he has to return it to agricultural use.

Mr. Ridley: The depot site is surplus to the Crown's requirements. There are no plans to return it to agricultural use.

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Property Services Agency will relinquish rights assumed in wartime over the depot site in Pyrton, Oxfordshire.

Mr. Ridley: No. Rights were not assumed in wartime. Records show that rights were established before the war when the buildings were erected.

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of any documents held by (a) the Property Services Agency and (b) his Department, relating to the acquisition, planning status, construction, rating and occupancy of the depot site in the parish of Pyrton in the county of Oxfordshire which have not been released to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Ridley: I have arranged for copies of such documents to be placed in the Library.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many circulars from his Department since 1970 have dealt with land needs for (a) housing, (b) employment, (c) shopping and (d) outdoor recreation.

Mr. Ridley: I invite my hon. Friend to refer to my Department's "Planning Guidance: Index of Extant Circulars", a copy of which is in the Library. The index lists seven circulars, two development control policy notes and two planning policy guidance notes relating to housing development; two circulars relating to employment; three circulars and one planning policy guidance note relating to retail development; and three circulars relating to sport and recreation.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations have signed agency agreements with local authorities for development control work, and which urban development corporations are using consultants for development control work.

Mr. Trippier: All urban development corporations, other than Bristol and London Docklands, have agency agreements with their local authorities for development control work. Bristol DC uses consultants for this work; London Docklands DC uses in-house staff.

Housing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes were built by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in 1988.

Mr. Trippier: It is provisionally estimated that there were 15,300 local authority completions and 9,200 housing association completions in 1988.

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate any changes he proposes to make following his consultation exercise in 1988 on houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Trippier: Possible changes are still under consideration.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to monitor problems arising from the new regulations on fixing of rent levels for houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We shall monitor the impact of the new private renting regime in relation to all types of dwelling, including houses in multiple occupation.

Housing Investment (Stockton)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what housing investment programme allocation has been made to the borough of Stockton-on-Tees in the current year.

Mr. Trippier: Details of local authorities' housing investment programme allocations for 1989-90 were announced on 8 December 1988. Stockton-on-Tees borough council's allocation is £2,241,500 which includes £37,500 for the homes insulation scheme.

Capital Receipts (Stockton)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what capital receipts were available to the borough of Stockton-on-Tees at the beginning of the current financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not yet available.

Housing Projects (Stockton)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estate action and other housing projects his Department is undertaking in Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. Trippier: Two ongoing housing schemes, on the Clarences and Eastbourne estates, are being supported by estate action resources in 1989-90.

Shopping Areas

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about neglect of shopping areas awaiting redevelopment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: This issue is sometimes raised in the context of development plan policies, individual planning applications and proposals for inner-city regeneration. The most recent representations are those raised by my hon. Friend in the Adjournment debate on 10 April, to which I replied.

Roman Remains

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the significance of and need to safeguard the Roman remains discovered on the Hammerson Group site, Cannon street.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: English Heritage has informally advised that the existing consent will enable satisfactory recording of the majority of the archaeological remains. It is in touch with the developers and the Museum of London. To date we have received no other representations.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take immediate action to safeguard the Roman remains discovered on the Hammerson Group site, Cannon street.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Scheduling ensures that any works to the site require scheduled monument consent. Our information is that some of the remains will be destroyed but most of these areas were already partly damaged by the foundations of the previous building. The scheduled monument consent granted in December 1988 allowed for preservation by record of this part of the site. The majority of the remains, some 75 to 80 per cent. will be preserved beneath adjoining buildings.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the historic significance of the Roman remains discovered on the Hammerson Group site, near Cannon street station; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The site was scheduled in June 1986, being one of the largest Roman baths found in Britain. Recent discoveries have confirmed the existence of extensive and high quality remains.

Amusement Arcades

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been received seeking a tightening of the town and country planning law relating to amusement arcades; and whether the Government have any plans for future amendments to the law.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about planning decisions affecting amusement centres. Although some people regard them as socially or morally undesirable, amusement centres are a lawful use of land, and any applications for planning permission to establish them must be judged on their merits in terms of their land use planning implications. I do not consider that any amendment of planning law would be appropriate. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is responsible for the licensing arrangements under the Gaming Act 1968, and for byelaws under the Public Health Act 1961, which regulate the operation of amusement centres.

Teesside Development Corporation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding has recently been awarded to the Teesside development corporation; and for what projects it has been allocated.

Mr. Trippier: The external financing limit of the Teesside development corporation in 1989-90 has been agreed at £34 million. The corporation will continue to fund a number of major projects, including the redevelopment of the Teesdale area and the Tees offshore base.

Good progress has been made on the reclamation of the Teesdale site, the proposals for which include housing, offices and leisure facilities. The comprehensive redevelopment of this site will require the construction of a new bridge and barrage across the River Tees. These schemes are the subject of a Private Bill which was laid before Parliament in November last year.

The Tees offshore base is being developed as a joint venture between Teesside development corporation and the Tees and Hartlepool port authority. A number of major companies have already located at the base which is expected to provide 1,000 new jobs by the end of 1989.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Health and Safety

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons

Commission, what rights exist for safety representatives to inspect and take copies of accident reports and statistics in the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: There is no restriction on safety representatives who are members of the House of Commons Safety Committee, inspecting and taking copies of accident reports and statistics in the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what health and safety training is being provided for young workers in the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: The accepted definition of "young workers" is those between 16 and 18 years of age. The House does not employ staff in this category. Training in health and safety is available, however, to staff of the House as part of the general training programme organised on a departmental level.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many industrial injuries were sustained by workers in the House by category in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Beith: Information on reported accidents which have been classified as industrial injuries is not readily available. The number of reported accidents from 1979 to date is as follows:

	House of Commons staff	Property Services agency staff
1979	n/a	24
1980	n/a	23
1981	64	26

Fire Drills

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, when the House of Commons last held a fire drill.

Mr. Beith: Thursday 16 February 1989.

Members' Cloakroom (Losses)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Lord President of the Council what have been the reported losses of property from the House of Commons Members' cloakroom in 1988 and 1989 to date.

Mr. Wakeham: A coat, a cap and umbrella, and some champagne were reported lost from the House of Commons Members' Cloakroom in 1988. The coat was subsequently found. A blue holdall is the only reported loss, to date, this year.

Organic Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, answering on behalf of the House of Commons Commission, what is the policy of the House of Commons Commission on the purchase of organic food for sale in the restaurants of the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: Direct responsibility for the purchase of foodstuffs for use in the House lies not with the Commission but with the General Manager of the Refreshment Department, whose policy is to purchase adequate and regular supplies of good quality food at reasonable prices. It is understood that the Refreshment Department will use organic foods whenever these criteria are satisfactorily met.

Visitors (Shelter)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will list in specific terms the difficulties currently preventing more satisfactory arrangements for parties of visitors to the Palace of Westminster to shelter from inclement weather while queueing to join the Line of Route; what steps are being taken to overcome these difficulties; and when the issue will be finally resolved and new arrangements put in place.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 17 April 1989. It would not be appropriate at this stage for me to identify the difficulties involved or the steps being taken to resolve them. However, it is hoped that mutually acceptable arrangements will be agreed shortly and that these new arrangements will be put in place as soon as possible thereafter.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average annual cost of (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special needs pupils in the United Kingdom for the year 1987-88; and what is the average cost per pupil in Durham for (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special needs for the same year.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table.

Net Institutional Expenditure[1] per pupil[2]—1987-88

	Nursery and primary schools	Secondary schools	Special education
Durham	1,050	1,405	4,620
England	1,010	1,520	4,925

[1] Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DoE and pupil number returns to DES.

Information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Alcohol and Drugs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what programmes exist which teach children about (a) the dangers of alcohol, (b) the dangers of smoking and (c) the dangers of illegal drugs; and if there is evidence of local education authorities encouraging their schools to run any such schemes.

Mr. Butcher: An increasing number of schools now provide pupils with education about the dangers associated with alcohol and drug misuse and cigarette smoking. Such education programmes have increased as a result of Government and LEA funding of drugs education co-ordinators and in-service training for teachers. The order recently laid for science in the national curriculum makes specific provision for the teaching of different aspects of health education, including education about alcohol, drugs and smoking.

Teacher Numbers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what per cent. of teachers trained in United Kingdom in the years 1970 to the latest date available remain in the profession for at least five years and 10 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However, on the basis of teacher entry, wastage and re-entry rates for the year ending March 1986 (the latest for which figures are available), it can be estimated that 61 per cent. of those completing initial teacher training in England and Wales are in full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales five years later. The proportion in service 10 years after qualification is 47 per cent. Thereafter, the numbers leaving and re-entering service are in balance, so that the proportion in service 20 years after qualification is still 47 per cent.

Broadcast Loan Scheme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has considered making extra funds available to the Open university to allow for the reintroduction of the broadcast loan scheme.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend announced on 2 November last year an increase in the Open university's grant of £4·2 million in the financial year 1989-90 and similar additions for the next two years. The detailed allocation of these additional resources within the undergraduate programme is a matter for the university. It is receiving £68·4 million in recurrent grant in 1989.

School Building Replacement Scheme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money he has allocated in each of the last five years to local education authorities in respect of the school building replacement programme; and if he will make a statement on the criteria he applies in reaching decisions about the allocation of funds to the replacement programme.

Mr. Butcher: Local education authorities are responsible for the maintenance of school buildings. Under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, each year authorities receive block allocations of prescribed expenditure for the main service blocks, including education, but it is for them to decide how to spend their allocations. My right hon. Friend sets the local education authorities' allocations of prescribed expenditure for education. In formulating these capital allocations, priority is given to committed expenditure up to the levels previously indicated to authorities, new projects to meet population growth and new projects to remove surplus places in the schools sector. Any remaining funds are allocated for improvement and replacement projects. In accordance with the criteria the allocations for schools in the last five years are set out in the table.

	County and voluntary controlled schools	Voluntary aided and special agreement schools
1985-86	230·0	35·3
1986-87	232·9	27·8
1987-88	254·0	39·1
1988-89	319·0	47·1
1989-90	311·4	56·1

Notes:

1. The table provides details of the notional schools capital allocation.
2. The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his best estimate of the numbers of young people in further or higher education or on Government training schemes under the age of 25 years who will be liable for at least 20 per cent. of the community in (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales.

Mr. Jackson: All students (excluding school pupils) aged 18 to 24 will be liable for at least 20 per cent. of community charge. In 1987-88 there were some 110,000 full-time and part-time students aged 18 to 24, excluding those on training courses, studying in Scotland and 970,000 in England and Wales. The Training Agency estimates that in 1987-88 there were on average 6,000 people aged 18 or over on the youth training scheme in Scotland and 71,000 in England and Wales. In addition, 12,000 trainees aged 18 to 24 started on employment training in Scotland and 78,000 in England and Wales between 5 September 1988 and 31 March 1989.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of (a) the number of educational establishments in the Greater London area which will require certification officers for the introduction of the community charge in April 1990 and (b) the number of students who will require certification in the Greater London area.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is estimated that, excluding private and independent establishments, there are 114 educational establishments within the area of the London boroughs which will require certification officers for the introduction of the community charge. There is no reliable estimate of the numbers of independent and private establishments requiring certification officers. It is not possible to give an accurate estimate of the numbers of students requiring certification for community charge purposes within the area of the London boroughs because the criteria for registration as a student do not coincide with categories of students for whom figures are collected.

University Posts

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that applicants for academic and non-academic university posts are interviewed by a selection committee whose chairman does not enjoy sole executive authority.

Mr. Jackson: That is a matter for the universities.

Pupil—Teacher Ratios

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the current pupil—teacher ratios for both primary and secondary education in each local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: In January 1988 the pupil—teacher ratios in maintaned primary and secondary schools in each local education authority in England were as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Office.

Mr. Luce: Senior grades in my Department are recruited by the Civil Service Commission. The commission has recently run publicity campaigns aimed at increasing awareness amongst ethnic minorities of career opportunities in the Civil Service. The commission monitors the ethnic origin of all applicants.

THE ARTS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Luce: Senior grades in my Department are recruited by the Civil Service Commission. The commission has recently run publicity campaigns aimed at increasing awareness amongst ethnic minorities of career opportunities in the Civil Service. The commission monitors the ethnic origin of all applicants.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Local Authority Income

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent his Department has studied the possibility of replacing locally collected local authority income with a hypothecated amount within the income tax system; and if he will list such research or studies which have taken place over the last 10 years.

Mr. Major: This approach of "assigned revenues" has been considered and rejected in successive studies of local government finance, most recently in the 1983 White Paper "Rates: Proposals for rate limitation and reform of the rating system" (Cmnd. 9008). It is not the practice of the Government to hypothecate revenues from a particular tax to particular areas of expenditure.

11 Downing Street (Works of Art)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing (a) the works of art, objects or artefacts currently on loan from national museums and galleries at 11 Downing street, (b) the museum or gallery from whose collections they are loaned and (c) the term of each loan.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The works of art on loan to No. 11 Downing street from galleries are as follows. Details of the terms of loan for each painting can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been removed from the United Kingdom at the expense of the carriers under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987, by country of destination.

Mr. Renton: None. The Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 does not contain powers to remove people from the United Kingdom.

Rape and Child Abuse

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department towards encouraging courts in England and Wales to allow rape or child abuse victims to give their evidence behind screens to try to stop intimidation of such people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is for the courts to decide in the circumstances of each case whether or not to use screens. In addition, section 32 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 enables children under the age of 14 to give evidence by live television link from outside the courtroom in trials on indictment for violent and sexual offences. An advisory group chaired by his honour Judge Thomas Pigot QC is considering whether video-recorded evidence by children and other vulnerable witnesses should be admissible in criminal proceedings, and we look forward to receiving its report in the summer. We will examine any proposals for further protecting witnesses from courtroom intimidation in the light of group's findings.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights in England; and which organisations made these representations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representations are regularly received, both from individuals and organisations, which might be interpreted as alleging violations or denials of human rights in relation to specific cases or generally. No central record is kept of such representations or of the organisations making them.

Police Sporting Schemes

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of whether police schemes for providing young people with purposeful activity of a sporting nature during their leisure time or vacation provided any evidence of a reduction in criminal referrals; how many such schemes are in operation; and what assessment has been made as to the costs of these schemes compared with the cost of referrals.

Mr. John Patten: There are no central records of schemes of this kind, although we are aware of many being run throughout the country, most of which draw local sponsorship and voluntary effort. It is for chief officers to decide whether to establish such schemes and to assess their value within the general cost-effective management of each force. One scheme, the Staffordshire police activity and community enterprise programme, (SPACE) in Staffordshire, has been the subject of a Home Office crime prevention unit paper which concluded that there was a possible link between SPACE and changes in the local crime pattern, but that other factors could also be involved. In Avon and Somerset, police schools liaison officers run over 100 different schemes and activities.

Homosexuality

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, Official Report, 1 December 1988, column 396, what response he has had from the Law Officers in Jersey and the Isle of Man in respect of amending their laws on consensual homosexual acts between males.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The island authorities in Jersey and the Isle of Man have indicated that they have under consideration the question of legislation on this matter in order to enable them to conform with the European convention on human rights.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking on the recommendations of the National Association of Probation Officers recent report on the imprisonment of women with dependent children, a copy of which he has been sent.

Mr. John Patten: We published last year proposals for the development of non-custodial sentences. The national standards for community service orders, introduced on 1 April, ask probation areas to ensure that community service placements are available for women offenders, including those who are pregnant and those with young children. A review is taking place of policies on mothers and babies in prison.

Guildford and Woolwich Pub Bombings

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost hitherto of the current investigation into the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings; how far this is apportioned between (a) the Home Office, (b) Avon and Somerset policy authority; how many officers are absent from duties in Avon and Somerset and whether full account is taken of this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The inquiries by the Avon and Somerset constabulary into the new evidence which had been made available to my right hon. Friend in this case have been concluded. Following the issue of a writ the matter of costs is sub judice.

The case was referred to the Court of Appeal on 16 January and the conduct of the prosecution case now rests with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Murders (Chinatown)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the progress of investigations into the recent murders in London's Chinatown.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The conduct of the investigation is a matter for the commissioner.

Single Market (Immigration)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the single European market in 1992 will have on immigration arrangements for people from (a) Montserrat and (b) other British dependencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None.

Drunkenness (Wiltshire)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to the number of (i) soldiers and (ii) civilians arrested by Wiltshire constabulary in (a) Salisbury and (b) Amesbury and subsequently charged with being drunk and disorderly or causing a breach of the peace in each of the past 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available centrally relates to the number of persons found guilty or cautioned for offences of drunkenness in the Wiltshire police force area in 1987. This information was published in Home Office statistical bulletin 31/88, a copy of which is in the Library.

To produce such information for each month of 1987 would involve disproportionate cost. Information is not collected centrally on the occupation of persons found guilty or cautioned nor can the area breakdown requested be given. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of (a) fiancés and (b) male spouses who have been refused entry clearance and had an appeal against that refusal turned down on more than one occasion over the last five years.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available; the information available centrally does not separately identify re-applicants.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what positive practical proposals are being considered by his Department for continued or future support for schemes including bail support provision and other measures as a means of tackling overcrowding in (a) Her Majesty's prison Armley and (b) other prisons with a view to reducing the number of unconvicted young prisoners on remand; and what further measures he proposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government continue to demonstrate their commitment to reducing the number of young people remanded in custody and to relieving prison overcrowding.

An extensive development programme is under way to provide 500 extra bail places at approved hostels by April 1991. The first two hostels in this programme are due to open shortly and one of these is in Bradford. We are considering proposals of establish further approved bail hostels in West Yorkshire.

My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is preparing improved training on bail decisions for magistrates. We are encouraging the development of bail information schemes which give courts better information on which to base decisions about bail. A scheme is proposed for Leeds and is now subject only to final approval.

By the mid-1990s over 25,000 new prison places will have been delivered by the prison building programme. The programme is frequently enhanced. We are now considering proposals to build two 300-place remand centres by 1991. One of these is at Everthorpe on Humberside. The building programme includes a refurbishment project at Her Majesty's prison Leeds which will increase its certified normal accommodation by 226 in 1992 and by 500 in 1997.

At the end of February this year there were over 600 fewer young prisoners on remand than 12 months previously.

Immigrants (Literacy Test)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce a language or literacy test for immigrants seeking to settle in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: We have no plans to apply such a test to those who wish to come to this country for settlement. But anyone wishing to acquire British citizenship by naturalisation is already subject to a language requirement.

Television Licence Fee

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prior notice and publicity of the recent increase in TV licence fee charges was given (a) in Stoke on Trent North and (b) nationally.

Mr. Renton: The increase from 1 April 1989 was announced to the House by my right hon. Friend on 27 October 1988, and was widely reported. Counter grille notices were displayed at Post Offices from 20 March. Reminders were also enclosed with renewal notices for licences expiring on 31 March; though I understand that in some areas these were delayed in the post. The Post Office is inquiring into the reasons for this.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the level of TV licence fees (a) generally, (b) for the elderly and (c) for those in sheltered accommodation.

Mr. Renton: Increases in the standard licence fee will remain linked to RPI increases until April 1991. There are no plans to alter these arrangements before then. Licence fees for the elderly and those in sheltered accommodation have been discussed on a number of occasions, and we are not persuaded of the need for further review.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) the police and fire services and (c) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangements on content with the European Community.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 April 1989]: A total of 181 vehicles was purchased by the Home Office in 1988, at a cost of £1·95 million. Of these, 173 were described by the manufacturers as United Kingdom-produced, on the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom-produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value.

Information on the country of origin of vehicles purchased by individual police forces and fire brigades and by public sector agencies is not held centrally. However, about 80 per cent. of the vehicles in use in the police service in 1988 are reported to be United Kingdom-produced.

War Crimes Inquiry

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to publish the forthcoming report of the war crimes inquiry, which is currently investigating persons suspected of involvement in Nazi crimes and now resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 17 April 1989]: As I indicated to the House in exchanges following my statement on 8 February 1988 announcing the establishment of the inquiry, publication of its report will depend on the nature of its contents. I shall consider this matter carefully when I have received the report.

Amusement Machines

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the law governing licences for the installation of amusement machines; and whether the Government proposes to review the law in this area.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 April 1989]: We have received representations from a wide range of organisations and individuals concerning the provisions of the Gaming Act 1968 as they apply to amusement-with-prizes machines, in particular on the question of possible excessive involvement of children and young people in playing such machines. As a result we undertook a review, including research by the Home Office research and planning unit, during 1987-88 and we announced our conclusions on 28 July 1988 at columns 423-24. The results of the research showed that, while for a small minority of young people public concern is well-founded, the scale of the problem does not justify legislation. We have, however, initiated various steps, including consultation with all interested parties, to deal with problems identified in the review.

We have also received representations to allow amusement-with-prizes machines in licensed betting offices, but have no current plans to do so.

Mr. K. Vinayagamoorthy and Mr. A. Anapatan

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the immigration and work permit status of the late Mr. Kandiahkanapathy Vinayagamoorthy and the late Mr. Ambikaipahan Anapatan.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Both men had been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom, which entitled them to take employment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in the Department of Trade and Industry are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Forth: The figures as at 13 April 1989 are:

	Number	Percentage
(a) Women
G1	Nil	—
G2	1	8·3
G3	3	5·4
G4	Nil	—
G5	24	10·9
G6	14	8·0
G7	110	11·4
All staff	5,974	43·4
(b) Ethnic minorities[1]
G1-4	Nil	—
G5	2	0·9
G6	4	2·3
G7	16	1·7
All staff	1,147	8·3

[1] From 86 per cent. response to survey.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Department of Trade and Industry last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: An ethnic survey of DTI staff was completed in April 1988. The resulting data base is continuously updated.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Forth: Recruitment to senior grades is normally conducted on the Department's behalf by the Civil Service Commission. On those few occasions when DTI recruits directly, the Department makes clear in its advertisements that it is an equal opportunity employer.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future status of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory.

Mr. Forth: Today the National Weights and Measures Laboratory has been established as a next steps agency. The laboratory is responsible for ensuring that the measurement aspects of retail and wholesale trade are accurate and fair through its work to approve designs of equipment such as scales, petrol pumps and weighbridges. It will play an important role as the EC becomes a single market in 1992.

As an agency, the NWML will have increased financial and management freedoms to enable it to operate more effectively and efficiently. The change to agency status will give Dr. Peter Clapham, the chief executive, and the laboratory greater freedom to meet the challenges arising from the rapid development of technology as well as from the single European market.

The NWML remains part of the DTI and its 50 employees will continue to be civil servants. It will continue to serve both local authority customers and industry, as well as advising on technical matters relating to measurement and trade.

Details are set out in the laboratory's policy and resources framework document, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Single Market

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what effect the single European market in 1992 will have on trade arrangements with (a) Montserrat and (b) other British dependencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Removal of remaining internal trade barriers after 1992 will make it easier for everyone to do business throughout the Community. The Community will undoubtedly continue to offer preferential access to developing country products under the ACP/Lomé and other arrangements.

New Companies (Share Capital)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of new companies formed in 1987 and 1988 had a nominal share capital of £100 and £100 to £1,000.

Mr. Maude: In 1987-88 a total of 38·3 per cent. of new companies in Great Britain were incorporated with nominal share capital of up to and including £100, and 0·5 per cent. with nominal share capital of over £100 and under £1,000. This and other information about companies is available from "Companies in 1987-88" a copy of which is in the Library.

Accounting Standards (Stock Exchange Letter)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the text of his Department's letter to the stock exchange complaining about the exchange's publicly expressed hostility to the proposals of Sir Ronald Dearing in his report on the future making of accounting standards.

Mr. Maude: No. The hon. Member may have seen a further press release from the international Stock Exchange, which the Government welcome.

Arms Contracts (Losses)

Mr. Chris Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on how many arms contracts losses have been incurred under the export credits guarantee scheme for each year since 1979; and what has been the total involved for each year.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Separate figures are only available for arms business underwritten on ECGD's section 2 (national interest) account. On this basis, total figures for premium, claims and recoveries are as follows:

1979-80	13,192	8·7	26,162	9·9	4,011
1980-81	6,357	4·2	31,684	10·9	3,847
1981-82	9,238	3·9	7,471	2·5	10,701
1982-83	12,196	3·5	5,183	0·9	4,012
1983-84	17,465	10·7	18,502	2·7	5,747
1984-85	10,754	6·7	10,445	1·2	924

1985-86	22,375	13·1	8,212	1·1	447
1986-87	20,667	13·0	29,909	3·8	594
1987-88	15,013	10·7	46,000	4·7	154

The figures relate to cash flows in the relevant financial year. Claims figures should not be equated with losses; in particular, substantial recoveries can be expected from the proceeds of on-going rescheduling agreements. The figures indicate that ECGD's general experience on this arms business has been better than on other trade sectors.

Vehicles

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) the Post Office and (c) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 17 April 1989]: My Department purchased 77 vehicles in 1988 at a total cost (including VAT) of £583,000. Seventy-six of these vehicles were produced in the United Kingdom on the basis of the definition employed by my Department for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value. Vehicle purchases by the Post Office are a matter for the board, and information relating to public bodies for which my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State is responsible is not available centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Transport and Energy Planning

Q28. Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Departments of Transport, Environment and Energy, relating to transport planning and energy use matters; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Departments of Transport, Environment and Energy, relating to transport planning and energy use matters.

Q40. Mr. Marland: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding her recent visit to Africa.

Q46. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding her recent visit to Africa.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) earlier today.

NATO

Q59. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Q77. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Q100. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has not received any recent representations on NATO's anniversary, although she is regularly involved in a range of matters regarding the United Kingdom's relationship with the allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Rastafarians

Q124. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the employment of Rastafarians in the public service.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The policy of Her Majesty's Government is to afford equal opportunity for employment within the public service to all eligible persons. This requires that employees are selected on the basis of their ability, qualifications and fitness for work and that there is no discrimination on racial grounds. This policy applies to all ethnic groups.

United States President

Q182. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to meet the President of the United States of America.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will see President Bush when he is in Europe for the NATO summit meeting at the end of May.

Namibia

Q195. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what is her assessment of the prospects of a peaceful solution to the political problems of Namibia.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

We very much regret the early difficulties encountered in the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence and deplore the incursion which led to these. We welcome the agreement on the return of SWAPO forces to positions north of the 16th parallel in Angola. It is essential that this is put into effect and that henceforth all sides abide by their undertakings in the United Nations plan.

Eastlands

Q236. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Eastlands in Rugby.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has no plans at present to do so.

Elections (Publicity)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is the total amount of money being spent by Her Majesty's Government Departments on publicising the individual's right to vote in the forthcoming (a) county council and (b) European elections.

The Prime Minister: Every person registered to vote at these elections will receive a poll card specifying the election, and when and where polling will take place: the cost to the Treasury at the forthcoming European parliamentary elections is expected to be in excess of £3 million; a corresponding figure for the county council elections is not readily available. The cost of delivering candidates' election addresses at the European parliamentary elections, expected to be in excess of £4 million, will also be met by the Treasury. An annual campaign undertaken by the Home Office at a cost of around £0·5 million publicises the need to be included in the electoral register in order to secure the right to vote at all elections in the forthcoming year.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 April.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

This morning my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister addressed the conference on security and co-operation in Europe forum at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. This afternoon my right hon. Friend will attend the 150th anniversary of independence celebrations in Luxembourg.

EC (Monetary Union)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library a copy of the Delors committee's report on economic and monetary union in the European Community.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Football Violence

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken to enforce the convention on spectator violence at sports events signed on 19 August 1985 by Ministers of 10 nations, including the United Kingdom; what specific results have been achieved in the implementation of each of the 17 articles of this convention, and if she has any plans to assure the European Union of Football Associations that the convention will be fully implemented so that English football clubs can be re-admitted to European football competitions.

The Prime Minister: Fifteen countries have signed and ratified the European convention which was initiated and drafted by the United Kingdom following the Heysel stadium tragedy in 1985. The United Kingdom was the first signatory to the convention and chairs the standing committee which monitors its operation. Considerable progress has been made by the Government, the police and the football authorities to give effect to the measures contained in the convention. The Football Spectators Bill will provide further measures to counter hooliganism at football matches in this country and abroad. We will continue to keep UEFA informed of progress on these matters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Eggar: The most recent information available as regards women officers in the aid wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and in the equivalent diplomatic service grades is as follows:

Grade		Number		Percentage
HCS	DS	Aid Wing (at 1 April 1989)	Diplomatic Wing (at 31 December 1988)	Aid Wing (at 1 April 1989)	Diplomatic Wing (at 31 December 1988)
				Per cent.	Per cent.
1-3	Senior grade	0	4	0	2·6
4	No DS equivalent	0	—	0	—
5	DS4	4	10	10	3·5
6	No DS equivalent	3	—	4·6	—
7	DS5	19	35	11	9·8
All grades	DS[1] mainstream	663	759	43·8	24·3

[1] Information concerning all Home Civil Service equivalent grades in the FCO at 31 December 1988 is not yet available.

There are no members of ethnic minority groups at DS5 and above in the diplomatic wing. The total number of staff in the diplomatic wing who have identified themselves as coming from ethnic minorities is 97, representing 1·8 per cent. of respondents.

In the aid wing, 1·7 per cent. of staff above grade 7 are from ethnic minorities. The total number of aid wing staff who have identified themselves as coming from ethnic minorities is 89, representing 5·9 per cent. of respondents.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: New recruits are asked to complete a form concerning their ethnic origins when they join the diplomatic or aid wings of the FCO.

An initial survey of the ethnic origins of existing staff was carried out in April 1986 with follow-up exercises in September 1986, and January-February 1988. There are no plans for a further survey of this kind.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Eggar: There is no direct recruitment into the top grades of the FCO—above DS8-7D, equivalent to AT/HEO/D in the home Civil Service.

Appointments in the aid wing are by internal promotion or by open competition, and an equal opportunities policy is applied.

The FCO is an equal opportunity employer. This policy is made clear in recruitment literature and advertising, including, on occasions, in the ethnic press.

Rain Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussions with Senõr Londono, Foreign Minister of Colombia, during his visit to London on rain forest problems.

Mr. Eggar: During his visit to London from 10 to 13 April, I raised with Senõr Londono the strong concern felt in this country about the problems of the tropical rain forests. I stressed that we were willing to co-operate with South American Governments on this issue.

Namibia

Mr. Robert Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Nations peace plan of recent outbreaks of violence in Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: Recent events in Namibia have demonstrated that implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence can be a success only if all parties abide by their undertakings in that plan. We have been active diplomatically in helping to put the United Nations plan back on track.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there are any immediate plans to deploy the 7,500 United Nations troops in Namibia as specified under United Nations Security Council resolution 435.

Mrs. Chalker: This is a matter for the United Nations Secretary General. We have made it clear that, as a permanent member of the Security Council, we would consider promptly and sympathetically any request by the United Nations Secretary General for reinforcing the United Nations transition assistance group. He has made no such request.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Nations troops were in Namibia on 1 April; how many were proposed to be there under the original United Nations plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The strength of UNTAG's military component on 1 April was over 750. The full strength of UNTAG's military component is 4,650 as recommended in the United Nations Secretary General's report of 23 January. This is a reduction from the original level of 7,500 set out in 1978. The rate of deployment of UNTAG was for the United Nations to decide, once authorisation had been given by the General Assembly. We regret that delays, not of our making, in the Security Council and the General Assembly gave the secretary general inadequate lead-in time.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East, Official Report, 10 April, column 359, when he expects a decision on how the 10 million ecus earmarked by the European Community for the Namibia development trust are to be spent; and if he will make a further statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No decision has yet been taken on how the sum to which my hon. Friend refers is to be spent. It has not however been earmarked for the Namibia development trust. The Namibia development trust is simply one organisation which will be eligible to receive funds if it submits suitable projects. The European Commission is well aware of the need for assistance to Namibia to be strictly impartial during the transition to independence.

South Africa

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action within the Council of Ministers Her Majesty's Government took in relation to a proposed joint EEC statement on the South African Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have drawn attention within meetings of the Council of Ministers to the need for careful consideration of the Bill's implications for positive measures programmes in South Africa. A demarche on behalf of the Twelve was subsequently made by the Spanish ambassador in Cape Town. As my hon. Friend the Minister of State said on 16 March, we have also made bilateral representations to the South African Government.

Diplomats

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were allegedly committed in 1988 by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity; and how many foreign diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in that year as a result of alleged offences.

Mr. Eggar: Forty-four alleged serious offences by persons entitled to immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1988. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the report to the Foreign Affairs Committee "The abuse of diplomatic immunities and privileges (1985)" as offences falling into a category which could in certain circumstances attract a penalty of six months or more; we are advised that very few of the alleged offences would have been likely to attract a custodial sentence. The majority involved drinking and driving and shoplifting.

Fourteen diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in 1988 following alleged offences.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in London during 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The information is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which have incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payment.

The total for 1988 (10,079) indicates a 30 per cent. reduction over the total 1987 figure (14,437) and is only 9 per cent. of the 1984 figure (108,845) the last to be published before the introduction in May 1985 of the Government's policy on parking by members of diplomatic missions in May 1985.

We welcome the further reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved during 1988 and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines, and bring pressure to bear on diplomatic missions to reduce this still further.

TRANSPORT

St. Pancras-Sheffield Line

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to discuss with the British Railways Board the further electrification of the St. Pancras-Sheffield midland line.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to do so. It is for BR to propose such a scheme if it believes it to be worthwhile.

Ryrie Rules

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had concerning the Ryrie rules for (a) road projects and (b) rail projects.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I have meetings from time to time with potential private sector operators about the interpretation of these rules.

Lindane Container (English Channel)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the individual amounts of expenditure laid out by his Department in the attempt to recover the lost container of lindane in the Channel.

Mr. Portillo: The container of lindane was on board MV Perintis which sank in international waters in the English Channel on 13 March.

As the result of an Anglo-French air-sea search the floating container of lindane was located in a French area of responsibility on 15 March and taken under tow towards Cherbourg by the French authorities. While in transit the container was lost again. The French have subsequently carried out a very extensive but unsuccessful search but have not sought—or required—British assistance.

The exact location of the container is still unknown but is thought to be about 15 km north-west of Cap de la Hague, in a sector of the Channel for which the French authorities are fully responsible for taking counter-pollution action. Accordingly the Department has not been involved in the search.

Only £302·24 has been expended by the Department in the search for the lindane, on an aerial surveillance flight by an MPCU aircraft on 15 March as part of the initial, successful, search for the floating container.

M1-M25 Junction

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average lengths of peak hour tailback on the M1 at its junction with the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not systematically record information about the lengths of tailbacks.

M1 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 11 April to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, if he will identify the types of vehicles and numbers in the quoted traffic flow of 5,200 between junctions 9 and 10 on the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Typical peak flows by vehicle types are:

	A.M. peak southbound Per cent.	A.M. peak northbound Per cent.
Motorcycles	0·5	0·8
Cars/taxis	71·0	77·4
LGV	8 0	9·3

M1 (Accidents)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles were involved in accidents between junctions 9 and 10 on the M1 for each month since January 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of vehicles involved in injury accidents between junctions 9 and 10 on the M1, by month, from 1985 to 1987, are shown in the table. Detailed figures for 1988 are not yet available.

Container Terminal (Hull)

137. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present situation with regard to the closed container terminal in Hull.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that this terminal in the port of Hull ran at a loss for many years. After trying without success to secure the registered dock workers' agreement to reduced manning levels in order to make the terminal competitive, Associated British Ports announced its temporary closure last August. This January ABP announced that the closure would be permanent. The future of the terminal site is a commercial decision for ABP.

Roads

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to publish proposals on the future road network in the north-east region;

(2) when he expects to announce changes in the roads programme;

(3) when he expects to publish a White Paper on the future of the road system.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are currently reviewing the trunk road programme, including routes in the north-east region. We expect to announce the results in the early summer.

Traffic Area Organisation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to carry out a review of the traffic area organisation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have commissioned a review of the functions of the traffic commissioners and of the traffic area offices to identify any changes which would improve efficiency or standards of performance. The review will be carried out by Mr. J. Palmer, CB, who was a deputy secretary in the Department until his retirement. Any views or representations can be sent to Mr. Palmer at the Department's headquarters at 2 Marsham street.

"Motorcycling Safety"

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached in the light of comments received on his paper "Motorcycling Safety", issued in February 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposals for change were warmly received. There was a general recognition that the urgent need was to make motorcycling safer. The proposal that prospective moped riders and motorcyclists should be trained before being allowed to ride on their own received particularly widespread support.

The aspects of the proposals which led to most comment, were those dealing with progression to more powerful machines (over 400cc), and the duration of provisional motorcycle licences, which we propose reducing to one year. On the former, many commentators advocated a power limit either as well as, or instead of, the 400cc limit. On the latter, there was widespread concern that one year was not long enough, although the need for a firm incentive for provisional licence holders to take training within a year at most was widely recognised. Comments were also received on the proposed changes to the car licence holders, moped and motorcycle entitlements, and on the proposed prohibition on learners carrying passengers on the road.

In the light of these comments we have reached the following conclusions:

1. Car drivers' full moped entitlement will in future be provisional. This will make the position regarding moped the same as that for motorcycles. Car drivers' provisional motorcycling entitlement will be retained.

2. Car drivers will have to undergo the same training as other prospective motorcycle and moped riders before their provisional licence entitlement comes into effect.

3. The compulsory training, to be known as "basic training", will not necessarily have to be completed on one day. In the light of representations, there will be waivers of the basic training requirement for certain offshore islands, but these will be subject to tight conditions. We are to start mandatory training in mid-1990. In the meantime, training schemes will be phased in on a voluntary basis wherever possible. Detailed discussions are now well advanced with training bodies, local authorities, motorcycle manufacturers and dealers about the content of the training courses and the arrangement for ensuring that motorcyclists can take the training with the minimum practical difficulties.

The proposal to reduce the validity of provisional licences from two years to one will be modified. A licence will be valid for one year in the first instance and will be extended for a further year if the holder has taken but failed a test before the end of the year or has booked a test which, for good reason, could not be taken.

4. The proposal to create a licence category for motorcycles in excess of 400 cc will be amended to incorporate a power limit. We favour a system under which drivers will be able to progress to larger machines after two years' riding experience on a full licence. The technical definition of the power limit, and the scope of the two years' experience qualification, will be considered further in the light of consultations on the European Commission's proposal for a second directive on driver licensing which covers both points. We are still considering whether an additional test could be provided for those exceptional cases where a rider might have gained sufficient experience to ride a bigger machine in less than two years.

5. As proposed in the original package, learner riders will be banned from carrying passengers. Concern expressed in the consultation exercise about the degree to which carrying pillion passengers changes the handling characteristics of motorcycles (particularly smaller ones) far outweighed comments favouring continuation of the present arrangements.

BREL (Sale)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the sale of British Rail Engineering Ltd. is to be completed.

Mr. Portillo: I am pleased to announce that the railways board has today completed the sale of its engineering subsidiary BREL (1988) Ltd. to the consortium comprising the management and employees of BREL, Trafalgar house plc and Asea Brown Boveri Ltd.

Traffic Noise

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the noise levels on the db(A) scale at which compensation or soundproofing grants may be payable for the United Kingdom and the other members of the European Economic Community in respect of new roads or railway lines.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 13 April 1989]: For England and Wales road traffic noise is covered by the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975. Broadly comparable regulations apply to Scotland. There are no such regulations applying to Northern Ireland. We do not have (for either road or rail) detailed information of arrangements in the other EC countries.

The 1975 regulations apply a threshold level of 68db(A)L10 18 hour. Where it is estimated that noise levels from traffic will within 15 years be at or in excess of this level at dwellings within 300 m of the new road, a duty is imposed on highway authorities to offer secondary glazing provided that:

(a) the traffic noise level will be at least 1 db(A) more than the level before the road was built; and

(b) noise from traffic using the new road will contribute at least 1 db(A) to the calculated level.

There is no statutory noise standard for new railways. For further information on rail noise insulation, I refer to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 10 April at column 409.

Ferries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by name, for each of the seven passenger ferries which do not comply with the enhanced safety standards recommended after the sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise, the reason why modification is not a realistic proposition (a) because it is technically impossible to make the modification, (b) because financial consideration prevents work being carried out, or (c) due to any other specified reason; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 4 April 1989, at column 20, which named the ferries that the owners have indicated will not be retained for more than about another three years. Modification would be so extensive that they do not believe it to be economically realistic.

WALES

Beef

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the present state of the beef sector of the agricultural industry in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The beef sector in Wales is in a healthy condition. The June 1988 agricultural census results show that the total beef herd in Wales increased by 2 per cent. over the previous year while the number of heifers in calf intended mainly for rearing calves for beef rose by 24 per cent., reflecting producers' optimism for the beef market.

Water Charges (Fire Service)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the fire service will be exempt from charges for water when Welsh Water is privatised.

Mr. Grist: Clause 79(1) of the Water Bill currently before Parliament specifically precludes the privatised companies from making charges in respect of water taken for the purposes of extinguishing fires, testing apparatus installed or equipment used for extinguishing fires.

DEFENCE

Disarmament

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the achievements made by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in multilateral disarmament of (a) conventional weapons, (b) chemical and biological weapons and (c) nuclear weapons since 1959.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

With regard to conventional weapons, all NATO states are signatories of the agreement reached in Stockholm in September 1986 on a range of confidence-building measures designed to increase openness and predictability about military activities in Europe NATO states are currently participating in a further round of such talks in Vienna designed to build on the results achieved in Stockholm. Also in Vienna, NATO/Warsaw pact negotiations have just begun on conventional armed forces in Europe with the aim of establishing a stable balance of forces in Europe: the mandate for these negotiations is based largely on Alliance proposals. These new talks supersede the MBFR negotiations, in which a number of Alliance countries participated: these concluded on 2 February.

In the field of biological and chemical weapons an international convention prohibiting the development, production and stockpiling of biological weapons was concluded in 1972. All NATO member states are a party to it. The multilateral negotiations for a global ban on chemical weapons continue at the 40-nation conference on disarmament in Geneva.

In respect of nuclear weapons NATO countries actively supported the successful negotiation of the INF treaty removing ground based intermediate range nuclear missiles from Europe: the elimination of these missiles was first proposed by NATO in 1981.

Soldiers (Arrests)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers have been arrested by the military police in (a) Salisbury and (b) Amesbury and subsequently charged with being drunk and disorderly or causing a breach of the peace in each of the past 12 months.

Mr. Neubert: The Royal Military police made no arrests for alcohol-related offences in Salisbury during the last 12 months. In Amesbury however, they arrested one soldier in July 1988, two in August 1988 and one in March 1989 for such offences.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds he has made payments to Leyland Daf, in connection with DROPS, additional to contract; when these payments were made; if he plans to make further such payments; in what form, and in favour of which company, these payments were made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following experience from the validation trials, the Ministry of Defence decided to combine features from the evaluation truck and the validation truck in finalising the production build standard for the medium mobility vehicles. Appropriate amendments were therefore made to the contract and payments were authorised to Leyland Daf reflecting these amendments. These payments were contained within the original approved programme limits. No further such amendments for DROPS equipments are envisaged.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from Leyland Daf on errors in the DROPS requirements as originally framed by EASAMS; what assessment he has made of the implications for defence procurement of these errors; to what extent companies competed against standards outwith the formal requirements; if he plans to seek to recover from EASAMS sums paid to Leyland Daf for rectification of the problems caused by these errors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There have been no such representations from Leyland Daf. Companies competed against target figures laid down by the Ministry of Defence, not EASAMS Ltd. who were employed in the role of management support only. The statement of requirement made clear to the competing companies that these targets would be difficult to meet in combination and that trade-offs between parameters would be allowed.

Swimming Pool (Mount Troodos)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received calling for the construction of a swimming pool at RAF Mount Troodos in Cyprus; and whether he intends to install such a facility.

Mr. Neubert: No bid has been received for a swimming pool at RAF Troodos. Moreover, the current scales for the funding of swimming pools at public expense provide only for their installation and maintenance if the pool meets a service training requirement; there is none in this case.

Tornado

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about training of aircrew on Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the operational capacities of the Tornado; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The operational capabilities of the RAF's front-line aircraft are kept under constant review. The build-up of the Tornado F3 force is proceeding satisfactorily, and the fourth squadron is due to become operational this year. As for the Tornado GR1, my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, informed the House during the Royal Air Force debate on 9 March at columns 1055-56 that we have decided to proceed with a mid-life improvement programme (columns 1055-56). A contract for the development phase of the programme was placed on Panavia on 16 March.

RAF Leeming (Security)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the security of RAF Leeming in Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A comprehensive security inspection by command staffs took place in February 1989 and interim inspections are conducted by the station security staff.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to erect a perimeter fence at RAF Leeming.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is already a boundary fence which delineates the extent of MOD property. Where it has been considered necessary to provide enhanced physical security, additional fencing has been erected.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unauthorised intrusions have occurred at RAF Leeming in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were no reports of any unauthorised intrusions.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about proposed United States military construction at RAF Upper Heyford, Oxfordshire;

(2) when his Department was first notified of the decision of the United States Air force to apply for funding for (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop at RAF Upper Heyford, in fiscal year 1990;

(3) on what date representations were first received from his United States counterpart regarding proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(4) when he was first aware that the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop had been added to the United States military construction budget request for fiscal year 1990;

(5) on what date or dates design work started on the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(6) which company or companies have been awarded conracts for design work on the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(7) on what date or dates the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop is scheduled to be started;

(8) which construction contracts for the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop have been awarded; and to which company or companies;

(9) on what date or dates the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop is scheduled to be completed; and when these facilities are scheduled to be operational;

(10) whether it is normal practice for the United States Air Force to start design work for proposed construction in the United Kingdom before approval for such construction has been given by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The budget for the United States military construction programme submitted to Congress at the end of January 1989 for the fiscal years 1990-91 included proposals for additions to the flight simulator facility, the avionics maintenance shop and the jet engine shop at RAF Upper Heyford. The hon. Member was informed of these budgetary proposals in the reply that I gave him on 6 February at columns 515-16.

Congress has not yet approved these proposals, nor has the United Kingdom Government authorised work to proceed. Consequently, no contracts have been let for these projects. However, in accordance with normal United States forward planning procedures, some preliminary design work was commissioned from the PSA in August 1988 and the Ministry of Defence was informed of the proposals in parallel.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will describe the role and function of the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(2) what variants of the F-111 aircraft will be supported by the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(3) how many aircraft will be supported by the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop;

(4) if he will describe the new mission that will be supported by the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have not agreed to any changes to the role or aircraft of the USAF 20th Tactical Fighter Wing stationed at RAF Upper Heyford, nor have they authorised any proposals to alter or expand the facilities at the station, other than for the aircraft currently based there.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop was not included in the answer to the hon. Member for Leyton, Official Report, 9 June 1988, columns 660-62 regarding United States military construction in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These proposals were not submitted to Congress until January 1989.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries have been informed of the proposed construction at RAF Upper Heyford of (i) additions to the flight simulator facility, (ii) additions to the avionics maintenance shop and (iii) additions to the jet engine shop.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding United States military construction at RAF Upper Heyford for the next five fiscal years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 6 February 1989 at columns 515-16.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation funded military construction at RAF Upper Heyford for the next five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO infrastructure funding for 1990 onwards has not yet been approved.

Dual-Capable Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on granting approval to the United States Air Force for construction of new facilities to support the basing of new dual-capable aircraft in advance of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation decisions on nuclear modernisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No construction required to support new dual-capable aircraft will be authorised in advance of NATO decisions; no early decisions are expected.

United States Air Force

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on whether it is normal practice for the United States Air Force to request funding for proposed construction in the United Kingdom before approval for such construction has been given by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am informed that it is not unusual for the United States Administration to request budgetary authority in advance of construction approval because of the long lead times in the United States programming and budgeting process.

Low Flying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what special circumstances in the last five years Royal Air Force aircrew have been authorised to fly at a height less than that set out in joint service publication 318 and the United Kingdom military low flying handbook, as provided in section 51(b) of the Air Force Act 1955.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The military flying regulations (JSP 318) set out special circumstances under which flight at a height less than that provided for in those regulations is allowed.

Joint Warfare Wing

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates, at what cost to his Department, and on what topics guest speakers have been invited to the joint warfare wing or its successor establishment since 1978.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 4 April 1989]: I have taken the hon. Member's question to relate to non-Government guest speakers, but including those who have retired from Government service or the armed forces. Records of visits by such speakers to the joint warfare wing 1978-1982 are no longer available. Full records for the period 1982 onwards are not available but topics on which guest speakers can be identified as having lectured include aspects of the Soviet threat; campaigns since world war 2; current international affairs; arms control negotiations; counter-terrorism; the conventional balance in Europe; the strategic defence initiative; the role of conventional land/air forces; and aspects of modern media and publicity techniques. Speakers are offered a fee in the region of £50 to £80, together with travel expenses.

SCOTLAND

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the annual payments by district council area made in respect of compensation agreements approved under section 30 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in 1988 and each of the preceding four years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Nature Conservancy Council (Scotland) has advised me that it has received no claims for compensation under section 30 of the 1981 Act in the period 1984-88. Had claims been made I would be unable to divulge details for reasons of confidentiality.

Federation Internationale des Vins et Spiritueux

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what approach he has received about the hosting of a reception for the Federation Internationale des Vins et Spiritueux during its forthcoming assembly in Scotland organised by the Scotch Whisky Association; and what has been his response.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any such approach.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost and value of third party insurance for the consequences of any nuclear accident at Torness power station; and if he will make a statement on the proportion of the risk which is carried by the Government, the South of Scotland Electricity Board and insurance companies, respectively.

Mr. Lang: The Nuclear Installations Act 1965 requires all operators of nuclear sites to make provision, either by insurance or other means, to meet claims for compensation in respect of injury or damage arising from a nuclear accident. The level required under the Act is currently £20 million. The cost to the South of Scotland Electricity Board of providing this cover is a matter for the board. Any claims in excess of the operator's liability and up to a sterling equivalent of 300 million special drawing rights (about £230 million) would be met from public funds. Beyond that, the Act provides that claims shall be satisfied to such extent and out of funds provided by such means as Parliament may determine.

Adult Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will set out Her Majesty's Government's policy on adult education in Scotland;

(2) what plans he has to issue guidelines to local authorities regarding provision of adult education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what proposals he has to promote adult education in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Education authorities in Scotland have a duty under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to ensure that there is available in their areas adequate and efficient provision of further education, and this includes voluntary part-time and full-time courses of instruction for persons over school age and social, cultural and recreative activities. Adult education is one element of this provision. Education authorities decide for themselves the level of provision in the light of local needs and circumstances, and having regard to the activities of other institutions providing further education or promoting its development.

The Government monitor developments in further education and, using resources available centrally, encourage particular areas of activity and provide support to a range of bodies and voluntary organisations whose functions include the promotion, development and provision of further education. But the education authorities determine their own adult education programmes and respond to needs as they arise in their localities. The Government have no plans to issue guidelines to authorities.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to earmark central Government educational expenditure grant for the provision of adult education in local education authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: General support for local authority services is provided through revenue support grant which affords local authorities maximum discretion to choose their own spending priorities. The excellent revenue support grant settlement for 1989-90 should afford authorities plenty of scope to provide such adult education services as they deem appropriate.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list in the Official Report figures for the past five years showing what financial resources were devoted to adult education in Scotland broken down by education authority area on a per capita basis;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report total expenditure on adult education in Scotland shown at constant 1979 prices for 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure on adult education is one element of expenditure on further, higher and community education and cannot be identified separately.

REPLAN Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce a similar scheme in Scotland to the REPLAN scheme in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Education authorities have a responsibility to ensure that adequate and efficient further education is available in their areas. The flexibility of the modular system of further education applying in Scotland and the Scottish wider access programme have both increased the opportunities available for all adults—including those not currently in employment—to benefit from education and updating. Education provision for the unemployed is also available through voluntary organisations supported by Scottish Education Department funding, and through the Training Agency's employment training programme.

Adult Counselling

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has plans to expand and develop adult counselling in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Education (Scotland) Act 1980 gives education authorities powers to provide vocational guidance services for persons other than those attending or leaving schools and colleges. Advice was given to education authorities in "The Careers Service—Memorandum of Guidance to Education Authorities in Scotland" issued in March 1988. Guidance and counselling for adult students is an important element of the provision being made by education authorities under the Scottish wider access programme.

Open Learning Centres

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has plans to expand and develop open learning centres in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office is providing funds towards the establishment and development of an open learning centre in Whitfield, Dundee. I hope that this initiative will provide valuable experience in delivering adult basic education, which may lead to the establishment of further centres in Scotland.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights in Scotland; and which organisations made these representations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available. My right hon. and learned Friend receives a large number of representations from individuals and organisations covering a wide range of subjects. While a number of these could no doubt be regarded as alleging breaches or denials of human rights, such representations are not separately identified and details of their origin and number cannot therefore be provided.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will instigate research into the suitability of the drug L.Threonine for the treatment of motor neurone disease;

(2) what proportion of his budget is spent on research into motor neurone disease.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department is not funding any research relating to the drug L.Threonine or motor neurone disease, but sympathetic consideration would be given to applications for any soundly based research project. The Medical Research Council funds research into aspects of motor neurone disease and is presently supporting two projects based in Edinburgh and two in Glasgow.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Rifkind: The number and percentage of women officers in grades 1 to 7 and overall in the Scottish Office and associated departments are shown in the table:

	Women	Women per cent.
Grade 1	—	—
Grade 2	—	—
Grade 3	1	4·0
Grade 4	—	—
Grade 5	8	6·8
Grade 6	25	14·3
Grade 7	42	10·7
Overall	3,185	41·8

None of the staff in unified grades 1 to 7 describe themselves as belonging to an ethnic minority. Of the total staff 0·4 per cent. are from the ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department conducted a voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff in 1987. Since then all new entrants have been asked to complete a questionnaire in order to keep this information up-to-date. I have no plans to conduct a further survey.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not conduct recruitment for top grades.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mrs. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current pupil-teacher ratios for each of the Scottish education authorities in both primary and secondary education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional average pupil-teacher ratios in education authority schools at September 1988 are set out in the table.

Storm Damage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of timber lost through wind blow during the storm that struck Scotland on 13 February; what measures he has taken to compensate the owners of such timber; and what has been the total cost of such measures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: An estimated 300,000 cu m of timber were blown down in Scotland on 13 February. As regards compensation, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister of State.

YTS

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many YTS schemes are run by voluntary and community organisations in each Scottish region;

(2) how many YTS schemes are run by the local authorities for each Scottish region;

(3) what is the total number of YTS schemes run in each local authority region in Scotland;

(4) how many YTS schemes are run by voluntary and community organisations which received a transitional funding grant before 1 April for each Scottish region;

(5) how many YTS schemes are run by local authorities which received a transitional funding grant before 1 April for each Scottish region;

(6) how many YTS schemes were paid a transitional funded grant in respect of training before 1 April for each Scottish region.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Details requested are set out in the table:

(2) what is the total number of YTS scheme trainees in each local authority region in Scotland;

(3) how many trainees are on transitional funded YTS schemes run by local authorities for each Scottish region before 1 April;

HEALTH

Westminster and Chelsea Teaching Hospital

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when it is planned that demolition work will begin on the site of St. Stephen's hospital, Fulham, in preparation for the construction of the new Westminster and Chelsea teaching hospital.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from North West Thames regional health authority that contractors will be starting work on the St. Stephen's hospital site on 15 May 1989.

Constituency Sizes

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 25 largest constituencies in England, in terms of numbers of electors on the register as at the current date.

Mr. Freeman: The 1989 electoral statistics for local authority areas will be published in "OPCS Monitor EL89/1" on 25 April. Electoral statistics for parliamentary and European constituencies are still being prepared. They will be published in "Electoral Statistics, 1989" (Series EL No. 16) at the end of May, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received the second report of the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has submitted its second report and copies have been placed in the Library. I am grateful to the committee and its chairman, Sir Peter Lazarus, for their excellent work in continuing to monitor the arrangements and for their second report. The report shows that, in general, the system of voluntary agreements, which govern tobacco advertising, health warnings and sports sponsorship, are continuing to work well and that the tobacco companies are honouring their commitments. This view is supported by the fact that the level of complaints to the committee has dropped substantially since its first report was published last year.

The chairman has expressed the hope that the Government and the tobacco industry will soon embark on renegotiating the voluntary agreements. We note his concern, and intend to discuss the way forward with the industry shortly. We also note and share his concern about older permanent advertisements which do not carry health warnings.

Bottled Water

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost in 1987 and 1988 of bottled water supplied to families with young babies by the East Anglian regional health authority and the Norwich district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The health authorities did not supply bottled water to families with young babies.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of National Health Service funding, by region, is dedicated to services for (a) premature senile dementia, (b) youth mental illness services and (c) forensic services;

(2) if he will list the estimated cost by region of maintaining hospitals for the mentally ill, mentally handicapped and elderly.

Mr. Freeman: Information on health authorities' expenditure specifically on premature senile dementia, youth mental illness services and forensic services is not collected centrally.

For information on regions' total revenue expenditure on hospital services analysed to types of hospital (including "Geriatric", "Mental Illness" and "Mental Handicap") I refer the hon. Member to tables in the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1986-87), copies of which are held in the Library.

NHS (Resources)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what criteria were employed to determine the allocation of the additional resources made available to the National Health Service as set out in the 1988 Autumn Statement (a) to regional health authorities and (b) from regional health authorities to district health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply of 21 December 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) at columns 316-18.

Elderly People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the estimated growth in the population of (a) over 75-year-old and (b) over 85-year-old people as a percentage of the total population for each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Mental Illness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each district health authority, the total number of people (a) receiving mental illness services for up to six months, (b) receiving mental illness services for six months to one year and (c) receiving mental illness services for over one year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested on duration of receipt of mental illness services in residential accommodation or on a non-residential basis is not held centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given to regional health authorities on the funding of resettlement projects for the mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: Resources for care in the community are made available from the main programme expenditure of health authorities and local authorities. Although no guidance has been given centrally, is is for health authorities and local authorities to determine how to deploy these resources in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Within health authority budgets, a specific allocation of joint finance is identified for community schemes jointly agreed between health authorities, local authorities, family practitioner committees and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has issued any guidelines to regions for achieving targeted growth in mental illness services.

Mr. Freeman: Last summer we issued planned guidelines to health authorities which included a requirement that by 1991 each district must have developed a "care programme" to provide a system of co-ordinated continuing care for people chronically disabled by mental illness, but living mainly in the community.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has issued any guidelines to health authorities on the way in which they determine the proportion of resources they should devote to services for the mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: In general, allocations to regional health authorities do not make separate provision for individual clinical services or client groups. It is for authorities to determine how the resources available to them should be spent in line with national policy guidelines and their assessment of local needs and priorities.

Maternal Deaths (Anaesthesia)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women of non-Caucasian origin were among the 19 maternal deaths and one late maternal death in England and Wales in 1982, 1983 and 1984 associated with anaesthesia.

Mr. Freeman: Four.

Salmonella

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the source of (a) his statement on 5 December that 1,000 people had been affected by outbreaks of salmonella traced back to eggs and (b) his Department's statement on 6 December that 7,000 cases of salmonella had been so traced.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 17 February 1989]: My statement on 5 December 1988 at column 19 that "up to the end of October there had been 46 reported outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning in England and Wales involving about 1,000 cases" related to cases where the infection was directly attributable to the consumption of eggs. Over the same 10-month period there had been a total of 23,039 salmonella isolations of which 10,544 were salmonella enteritidis phage type 4, the type predominantly associated with chicken and eggs.

My Department has never made any statement on 6 December or at any other time about 7,000 cases being traced.

Health Authorities (Allocations)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the cash allocations to regional health authorities in 1988-89 and 1989-90 in standard prices using 1989-90 as the base; and if he will estimate the cash allocations to regions on a weighted capitation basis for 1990-91 and 1991-92 using 1989-90 as the price base, assuming the total flow of resources as per the public expenditure White Paper, assuming population forecasts as per the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, and before taking account of inter-regional direct payments;

(2) what are the actual allocations made to regional health authorities for 1988-89 and for 1989-90 both on a current and standard price basis; and, in the case of the 1989-90 cash allocations, what are their percentage distances from the 1988-89 resource allocation working party target adjusted (a) by inflation and (b) by the percentage change between 1988-89 and 1989-90 in total nominal cash resources between 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 March 1989]: Initial allocations to regional health authorities in 1988-89 and 1989-90 at the price bases requested are shown in the following tables, together with 1989-90 allocation distances from 1988-89 RAWP targets adjusted as requested. The level of resources which will be allocated to direct payments between regions will be discussed with regional health authorities, and, until this process is complete, it is not possible to speculate about the distribution of funding in future years.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of farmers derive a significant proportion of their income from non-agricultural activities; and what proportion of national agricultural output is produced by those farmers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Sea Disposal Licences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those operations for which sea disposal licences for the deposit or incineration of waste at sea have been granted under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of licences issued under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 for disposals in England and Wales is as follows:

Marine incineration	20	13	15
Liquid industrial waste	26	20	18
Solid industrial waste	3	8	11
Sewage sludge	17	17	15
Dredged spoil	100	101	138

All licences are now issued on an annual basis; until 1988 some solid industrial waste disposals were covered by five-year licences. With the exception of the dredged spoil category virtually all licences issued were renewals of existing licences.

Details of licences issued are maintained by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on a public register.

Storm Damage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the amount of timber lost in the storm which struck England during October 1987; and what is the total cost of the measures taken as a result of the storm.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is estimated that some 4 million cu. m of timber were blown down in England in the October 1987 storm. The Forestry Commission is expecting to pay in the region of £3 million in supplementary grants for the restocking of woodlands damaged in the storm.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice or recommendations he has received from the working party on pesticide residues on the enforcement of existing, or introduction of new, pesticide regulations, or other legislation, as a means of helping to reduce the use of pesticides against wildlife.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The working party on pesticide residues' remit is to collect and report data on pesticide residues: it does not make recommendations concerning the use or misuse of pesticides, since that is the task of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. I believe that it is for the enforcement authorities to control the misuse of pesticides against wildlife, taking advantage of the improved opportunity for prosecuting those responsible which results from the introduction of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 23 March, Official Report, column 726-27, what advice and recommendations he has received from the advisory committee on pesticides on the enforcement of existing, or the introduction of new, pesticide regulations, or other legislation, as a means of helping to reduce the use of pesticides against wildlife.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The advisory committee on pesticides has taken the view that enforcement of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 is a matter for the competent enforcement agencies. The level of misuse of pesticides against wildlife has not suggested the need for additional measures or legislation.

Alar

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of orchards were sprayed with Alar in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the regular cycle of surveys, data have been collected for 1987 but not for 1988. The 1987 data are now being collated and will be published as soon as possible.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the crops on which the chemical Alar is used and the purposes for its use.

Mr. Donald Thompson: From the information available Alar products are currently used as growth regulators on apples, pears, chrysanthemums and other ornamentals, seed potatoes and on field beans for animal consumption.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much Alar was sold in the United Kingdom in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Such information is not collected by my Department.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information in the reply dated 28 July 1988, Official Report, columns 389-90, concerning the European Community agricultural budget and outturn and the United Kingdom contribution; and if he will add the forecast up until 1991 as used in the compilation of the forecast in the public expenditure White Paper (Cm 621).

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the table. The United Kingdom contributes to the budget as a whole rather than to individual components, so the figures shown for the United Kingdom contribution are notional. It is not the Government's practice to produce calendar year forecasts for future years.

Notes: Before 1978, Community expenditure was expressed in units of account. As this unit had a different basis from the present ecu the figures for 1973-77 are not directly comparable with those for later years.

[1] Covers expenditure on market support for first 10 months only. In addition the PDB contains 640 mecu for depreciation of old stocks, 800 mecu for reimbursement of butter disposals in 1987-88 and a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu.

[2] Covers expenditure on market support from November 1987 to 15 October 1988. In addition, the budget contains provision of 1,240 mecu for depreciation of old stocks and a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu.

[3] Covers expenditure on market support from 16 October 1989 to 15 October 1989. In addition the PDB contains 640 mecu for depreciation of old stocks, 800 mecu for reimbursement of butter disposals in 1987-88 and a monetary reserve of 1,000 mecu.

Insecticides (Cattle)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of residues in cattle hides resulting from the use of pour-on insecticides; and if he has any evidence of any consequential problems for the tannery industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Like all veterinary medical products, pour-on insecticides for use on cattle are subject to the licensing requirements of the Medicines Act 1968. A licence is granted only if the company making a product can show that it is effective and of good quality and can be used safely. I am not aware of any problems in the tanning industry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mental Illness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals in Northern Ireland in the last year after a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses, having been proved vulnerable boarders, subsequently became voluntary boarders.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many local authority residential places are currently available for those discharged from mental illness hospitals in Northern Ireland; what is the current rate of occupancy; and what are the projected figures for the next two years.

Mr. Needham: Statutory residential accommodation for the mentally ill in Northern Ireland is provided by the four health and social services boards. On 31 December 1987 the boards' homes and hostels provided 202 places for the mentally ill. The occupancy rate was 73·3 per cent. Information on projected figures for the next two years is not available centrally.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mental illness beds there were in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and what was the rate of occupancy; and what is the planned number for the current year.

Mr. Needham: The numbers for each of the last five years for which information is available are as follows:

Year	Beds	Occupancy rate
1983	4,732	79·3
1984	4,599	78·8
1985	4,478	81·99
1986	4,330	79·7
1987	4,163	80·2

The planned number for the current year is not available centrally.

River Roe

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to extend the European Community salmonid designation to the tributary streams of the River Roe.

Mr. Needham: As explained in my answer of 1 March 1988 at column 524, it is the Department's intention to extend designation of salmonid waters under the European Community directive 78/659/EEC as soon as resources permit. Consideration will then be given to designating the tributary streams of the River Roe together with other eligible rivers in Northern Ireland.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the introduction on 22 March 1989 in the Province of an over-18 card by the Federation of the Retail Licensed Trade of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I welcome the federation's action, which should assist in combating the problem of under-age drinking.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the current pupil-teacher ratios for both primary and secondary education in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available information relates to the 1987-88 school year and is as follows:

Education and library board	[1] Primary	[2] Secondary
Belfast	22·6	13·9
Western	23·6	15·2
North-Eastern	23·5	14·9
South-Eastern	23·7	15·0
Southern	24·2	15·0

[1] Includes nursery classes in primary schools and preparatory departments of grammar schools.
[2] Consists of secondary intermediate schools and secondary departments of grammar schools.

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the reply of 9 March, Official Report, column 1024, to the hon. Member for Brent, East, what is the precise number of other claims for compensation from ex-residents of the Kincora boys' home which are being processed; and if he will make a statement on the length of time taken to agree such settlements.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 April 1989]: In addition to the three claims which have been settled, eight other claims from ex-residents of Kincora boys' home are currently being processed. Settlements are normally the result of negotiations between parties and their legal advisers and I am not privy to them.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the survey of disability in Northern Ireland will take account of the criticisms made by the Disablement Income Group of the surveys undertaken by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 April 1989]: The study of disability in Northern Ireland is modelled closely on the study carried out in Great Britain by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys so as to facilitate valid comparisons of the findings. As in Great Britain, the views of the Disablement Income Group will be taken into account in considering the findings of the Northern Ireland study.

Anti-terrorist Co-operation (Firearms)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the conditions with regard to the carrying of firearms which have to be observed by police officers from the Republic of Ireland whilst in Northern Ireland for the purpose of discussing anti-terrorist co-operation with their counterparts in the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 14 April 1989]: A police officer from the Republic of Ireland, like any visitor, may not lawfully carry a firearm in Northern Ireland unless he is in possession of the appropriate authorisation from the Chief Constable of the RUC.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Chief Adjudication Officer (Report)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking in response to the recommendations contained in the annual report of the chief adjudication officer, 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The recommendations contained in the annual report of the chief adjudication officer, 1987-88 are currently being considered and the responses will be published in the next annual report as is the normal practice.

Attendance Allowance

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for attendance allowance there were in each of the last five years; how many of these claims were (a) unsuccessful, (b) awarded the lower rate and (c) awarded the higher rate; how many of the successful claims (i) satisfied the attendance conditions and (ii) satisfied the supervision conditions; and how many of the unsuccessful claims were applied for on grounds of meeting the supervision conditions.

Mr. Scott: Not all the requested information is available: the information which is available is in the table.

1984	239,804	57,430	67,445	114,325

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has completed his review of the introduction of attendance allowance for severely mentally and physically disabled children under the age of two years.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 22 February at column 682.

"Poverty"

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy with regard to the use of the word "poverty" in official governmental reports.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is our policy that, in reports prepared by the Department, the word "poverty" should be used whenever it is the appropriate word.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table using regional classification to show expenditure in 1988-89 on supplementary benefit payments for occupants of (a) private residential homes and (b) hostels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the estimated expenditure on payments of income support to people in private and voluntary residential care homes. I regret that reliable figures for hostel cases are not available.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage payments were made in 1987; and if he will categorise these according to the age of the child, when the vaccination took place, the year of the vaccination and the nature of the vaccination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Ten payments were awarded in 1987 under the provisions of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Details are in the table.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide figures indicating the proportion of people of pensionable age in receipt of inflation-proofed occupational pensions in the following age bands (a) 60 to 65 years, (b) 65 to 70 years, (c) 70 to 75 years, (d) 75 to 80 years, (e) 80 to 85 years and (f) 85 years and over.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

National Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the national insurance contributions yield in 1989-90 and the first full year of the proposed reformed system for those workers at or below

(a) 25 per cent. average earnings, (b) 33 per cent. average earnings, (c) 50 per cent. average earnings, (d) average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings, (g) 10 times average earnings, and (h) £150 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 April 1989]: The information is as follows:

Estimated yield: Class 1 primary national insurance contributions

£ billions

Earnings at or below	1989-90	1990-91
(a) 25 per cent. average earnings	0·1	0·1
(b) 33 per cent. average earnings	0·3	0·3
(c) 50 per cent. average earnings	1·0	1·0
(d) average earnings	6·5	6·2
(e) twice average earnings	12·8	12·5
(f) (g) three times average earnings	13·4	13·1
(h) £150 per week	2·2	1·7
All earners	13·7	13·4

The Government Actuary's Department has supplied the estimate of the yield from national insurance contributions. Average earnings are those of all full-time male and female employees. Insufficient information is available to enable the yield from people earning five and 10 times the average to be calculated, and the table, therefore, includes figures based on earnings of three times average earnings and of all earners instead. All figures are rounded.

Disabled People and Deaf People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount of money given under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to (a) all organisations working with and for disabled people and (b) all organisations working with and for deaf people, for each year from 1980 to the latest available date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 April 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The following table, which relates to England only, gives as close an estimate as possible of the amounts given in each of the financial years 1979-80 to 1988-89 under the section 64 general scheme to (a) organisations working exclusively or primarily with or for physically disabled and sensorily impaired people; and (b) organisations working with or for deaf and hearing-impaired people. These totals do not include grants paid to some organisations concerned with specific medical conditions or organisations working primarily with mentally handicapped or mentally ill people, even though some of these also work with physically disabled people. Also excluded are the awards recently made following the error in calculating the retail prices index. During the period specified by the hon. Member, grants paid under the section 64 general scheme to organisations working with physically disabled and/or sensorily impaired people totalled approximately £20·2 million. Of that, approximately £2·03 million was awarded to organisations working with or for deaf or hearing impaired people.

	Total disabled	Deaf/hearing impaired
1979-80	1,058,457	54,060
1980-81	1,641,283	155,420
1981-82	[1]2,031,507	158,600
1982-83	1,837,190	173,333
1983-84	2,129,394	289,500
1984-85	2,153,267	193,054
1985-86	2,339,083	241,950
1986-87	2,535,750	232,000
1987-88	2,528,043	256,300
1988-89	[2]1,975,965	273,944

[1] This total includes the continuation of a number of grants related to the International Year of the Disabled in 1981.

[2] This total excludes the sum of £686,000 paid to Motability in 1988-89, as that grant was removed from the Section 64 general scheme in that year. Grants to Motability are included in the totals for earlier years.

ENERGY

Margam Pit

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he now anticipates that a start will be made on the Margam pit.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The timing and priority of major projects is a matter for British coal, which keeps its capital expenditure programme under regular review. In the case of Margam, the timing will depend on the successful conclusion of a detailed agreement on six-day working and an up-to-date assessment of the project's commercial prospects.

EMPLOYMENT

Construction Industry (Accidents)

14. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of accidents that go unreported in the construction industry.

95. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of accidents that go unreported in the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: All cases of fatal injury in the course of work activity are reported to the enforcement authorities. It is not known what proportion of other reportable injuries to people employed in construction go unreported, but it is thought to be significantly more than 50 per cent.

63. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates in construction industries in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

128. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates in construction industries in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for employees is shown in the table. More than one third of the people employed in the industry are classified as self-employed. Prior to 1981, injuries to the self-employed were not reportable and under current regulations they are not reportable for self-employed people working on their own. Figures for the self-employed are therefore not included in the table, but the provisional 1987-88 figure for the number of employees and self-employed killed in the course of construction activity was 141.

Injury rates per 100,000 employees in the construction industry[1]

	Fatal Injuries	[2]Major Injuries	[3]All reported Injuries
1974	13·6	n/a	2,830
1978	10·4	n/a	2,976
[4]1987-8	10·1	206·6	1,914

[1] Defined as Order 20 of the 1968 Standard Industrial Classification in 1974 and 1978 and Division 5 of the 1980 SIC in 1987-88.
[2] The classification of injuries as major was first introduced in 1981.
[3] Includes all reported injuries causing more than three days' absence from work. Comparisons between years may be affected by variable under-reporting of non-fatal injuries.

n/a Not available.

Factory Inspectors

16. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors have left the Health and Safety Executive in the last 12 months; and how many were retirements and how many resignations.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the 39 factory inspectors who left the Health and Safety Executive between 31 March 1988 and 1 April 1989, eight retired and 27 resigned. A further four transferred to other Government Departments.

33. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors were conducting preventive inspections on the following dates: 6 June 1988, 7 September 1988 and 23 January 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Factory inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive's area offices are not employed solely on preventive inspection but also make visits in response to accidents or other incidents, complaints, inquiries or to follow up previously identified shortcomings.

Staffing figures are recorded on the first of each month. The numbers of factory inspectors in area offices on 1 June 1988, 1 September 1988 and 1 February 1989 were 520, 522 and 533 respectively.

51. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional factory inspectors would be required to enable the percentage of reported accidents investigated to rise to 10 per cent.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the form requested. Health and Safety Executive plans are not expressed in terms of a fixed percentage of reported accidents to be investigated. The 1989-90 plans provide for some 10,800 investigations of incidents (including occupational diseases, and dangerous occurrences, as well as accidents) reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Industrial Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations. This compares with 9,900 planned in 1988-89.

80. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of construction factory inspectors in post as at 1 April.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1989 there were 99·5 inspectors employed on the inspection of construction activities.

133. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the target numbers set for preventive inspections for factory inspectors in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's Factory Inspectorate does not set target numbers for preventive inspections and therefore the information requested is not available.

134. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of factory inspectors in post in 1979, 1987 and 1989 on 1 April.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979, 1987 and 1989 the Health and Safety Executive employed 742·5, 621·5 and 604 factory inspectors respectively.

Early Retirement

19. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage mature experienced workers to remain in their jobs and not take early retirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that the age at which a person retires is a matter to be settled between the individual and the employer. As the numbers of young people decline, it will increasingly be in employers' interests to make full use of the contribution which mature, experienced workers can make, and the Government are using a range of media to put this message across.

Compact Initiative

20. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many schools are currently taking part in the compact initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Training Agency has received proposals for operational compacts in 28 inner city areas to date. These plans indicate that once the proposals are approved and begin operation in September a total of 260 schools in these areas will be covered. All compacts have plans to expand in subsequent years.

The quality of applications have been impressive and show what can be achieved when education and business work together to meet the needs of their locality.

YTS

21. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of YTS trainees in 1986-87 gained a vocational qualification during their time on YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The figure for the period 1986-87 relates to all qualifications, vocational qualifications cannot be separately identified. A total of 21 per cent. of young people who left during 1986-87 gained a qualification while on YTS.

Figures for the latest available period (two years up to October 1988) show that 65 per cent. of young people completing YTS gained a qualification.

Employment Ministers

22. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the Employment Ministers of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries to discuss levels of employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are no current plans for joint meetings with Ministers from other member countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Levels of employment in the United Kingdom compare very favourably with those of other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. In the United Kingdom, a greater proportion of the population is in employment than is the case in our major European competitors and in many other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. This is partly the result of the rapid employment growth we have enjoyed since 1983.

28. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the Employment Ministers of the United Kingdom's European Community partners to discuss levels of unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

48. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he proposes to meet the Employment Ministers of the European Community to discuss the social proposals of the European Final Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friends to my statement on the last European Community Social Affairs Council, which appeared in the Official Report on 12 April 1989 at column 588. The next meeting of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers will be on 12 June at a meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council. The United Kingdom will continue its efforts to ensure that training and employment growth are Community priorities. In the meantime, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are continuing our programme of bilateral contacts with members states.

New Businesses

24. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many businesses were started during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: In 1987, the latest year for which figures have been published, the estimated number of new registrations for value-added tax was 205,000. The net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses in 1987 was 45,000, or nearly 900 a week on average. The indications are that the rate of increase during 1988 has been faster.

Small Businesses (Advice)

25. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for co-operation between enterprise agencies and training and enterprise councils for the delivery of advice to small businesses.

Mr. Cope: Support for new and expanding businesses will be a key responsibility for training and enterprise councils. They will assess what advice and other services are needed in their area and will seek to develop a coherent high quality system of support through local enterprise agencies and others who already contribute to the aim of assisting small business growth.

Training and Enterprise Councils

26. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the Director-General of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the introduction of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Fowler: I have no immediate plans to meet the Director-General of the CBI. The CBI has strongly supported our proposals to introduce training and enterprise councils and I look forward to its continued involvement as the initiative develops.

49. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received on the introduction of training and enterprise councils.

73. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made on establishing training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

91. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from industry and commerce in response to his plans to set up training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I published a prospectus on 10 March inviting employers to form training and enterprise councils. The response from employers has been excellent; almost 4,000 individuals and organisations have expressed an interest.

93. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the number of employers likely to be involved with the training and business programmes which will be organised by the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Cope: Training and enterprise councils will ensure that a greater number of employers are involved with training and enterprise activities at a local level. One of the major tasks of TECs will be to encourage employers to invest in training and developing their own staff as well as supporting the training and business programmes of the TEC. I published a prospectus on 10 March inviting employers to form TECs. Response has been excellent and there is already considerable interest throughout the country.

Mines (Occupational Health Services)

27. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the levels of occupational health services provided by British Coal under the requirements of the Coal Mines (Nationalisation) Act 1946 and by private sector employers in mines and quarries.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 replaced earlier legislative requirements relating to provision of occupational health services. There are no specific requirements as to how this should be implemented by employers in the mining and quarrying industries. However, British Coal provides an extensive range of services and employ over 600 qualified staff to operate them. Full details of this are published in the annual report of the British Coal medical service. No such detailed information is available for non-British Coal mines or for quarries.

Small Firms Service

30. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for the future of the small firms service following the creation of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The small firms service now forms part of the Training Agency. This brings together the closely linked services of counselling and training, and will lead to a more coherent and effective approach to small business support.

The training and enterprise councils will become responsible for the counselling activity of the SFS. This will help ensure that TECs become the natural focus for the local small business support network.

The SFS will maintain its counselling service in each area covered now until a TEC is established. The SFS information service will remain as a national service.

Employment Training

32. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people currently in training on the employment training programme had previously been unemployed for two years or more; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for those currently in training on employment training who were previously unemployed for two years or more are not available. However, of the 239,000 entrants to the programme by 31 March, it is estimated that some 38 per cent. or 91,000 had been unemployed for two years or more. This is an outstanding achievement as the programme is specially aimed at the longer-term unemployed.

85. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local authorities have supported employment training; and how many have opposed it.

Mr. Nicholls: As at 28 February 1989, a total of 263 local authorities were participating in employment training as training agents or training managers. There is no record held centrally by the Training Agency on the number of local authorities which have decided not to participate.

90. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently undertaking training on employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: By 31 March there were over 175,000 people in training. They clearly recognise the benefits the programme has to offer and the opportunity it provides to help them get a job.

Tourism

35. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the future of section 4 grants for tourism.

Mr. Lee: The section 4 scheme of assistance is being considered as one of a range of issues arising from the review of tourism policy. An announcement about the outcome of that review of policy, including the future of the section 4 scheme, will be made in due course.

114. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current capital investment in the hotel and tourism industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 14 March 1989, Official Report, column 195.

116. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to promote industrial tourism in the north-east of England.

Mr. Lee: Every opportunity will be taken to promote the benefits of industrial tourism in all parts of the country including the north-east and I welcome the initiative of the Northumbria tourist board to encourage more companies to open their doors to visitors by organising a conference on industrial tourism on 19 June at the Nissan factory, Washington new town.

Benefit Fraud

36. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure for savings for 1988 as a result of investigations of fraudulent claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The net benefit saving from my Department's fraud investigation work during 1988 was £65 million.

101. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were prosecuted for benefit fraud offences as a result of investigations by unemployment benefit fraud officers between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: As a result of investigations into benefit fraud offences, my Department prosecuted 3,981 people during the period from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989.

Competent Persons

37. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will meet the chair of the Health and Safety Commission to discuss the role of competent persons.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. Many provisions in health and safety legislation require specified tasks to be carried out by competent persons. The Health and Safety Commission keeps these provisions under review. If the commission wishes to make proposals to my right hon. Friend which would affect the role of competent persons in any particular area, he will consider those proposals most carefully.

Pre-entry Closed Shop

39. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to reform the pre-entry closed shop.

Mr. Nicholls: Our Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment", which was published on 20 March, contains the proposal that legislation should provide a right of complaint to an industrial tribunal for any individual whom an employer refuses to engage on the ground of non-membership of a trade union or of any particular trade union, or on the ground of refusal to agree that he will become a member after his employment has started. The Government believe that this proposal, together with existing legislation, would create a climate in which individuals will no longer have their livelihoods threatened simply because they are not members of a particular union or do not wish to belong to any union.

42. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has as to the number of workers in the United Kingdom covered by pre-entry closed shop restrictions.

Mr. Nicholls: Our Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment", which was published on 20 March, estimates the total number of people covered by all types of pre-entry closed shop arrangements in Great Britain as being of the order of 1·3 million. This estimate is derived from a recently specially commissioned survey, a summary of which has been placed in the Library.

70. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received following the publication of his Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" on the reform of the closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Our Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" was published on 20 March and the closing date for comments will be 20 June. We are, therefore, in the very early stages of the consultation period. To date we have received four representations on our proposal concerning the pre-entry closed shop and all expressed support for the Government's proposals.

Literacy and Numeracy

41. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special help is given to the unemployed who need training in literacy and numeracy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Considerable help is available to enable unemployed people receive literacy and numeracy training through YTS and ET. Additional support in YTS became available at the beginning of April through improved levels of funding. In ET, almost one in five trainees is receiving literacy and numeracy training. Further initiatives to improve the quality of provision are in hand.

Chemical Industry (Accidents)

45. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates in the chemical industries in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is shown in the table.

Injury rates per 100,000 employees in the clinical industry[1]

	Fatal injuries	[2]Major injuries	[3]All reported injuries
[4]1974	11·3	n/a	2,419
1978	3·2	n/a	2,699
[5]1987-88	1·2	160·4	1,051

[1] Defined as Order 5 of the 1968 Standard Industrial Classification in 1974 and 1978 and Class 25 of the 1980 SIC in 1987-88.

[2] The classification on injuries as major was first introduced in 1981.

[3] Includes all reported injuries causing more than 3 days absence from work. Comparisons between years may be affected by variable under-reporting of non-fatal injuries.

[4] Includes 28 people killed and 36 others who were injured by the explosion at the Flixborough Works and NYPRO (UK) Limited on 1 June 1984.

[5] Provisional.

106. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of accidents that go unreported in the chemical industry.

Mr. Nicholls: All cases of fatal injury in the course of work activity are reported to the enforcement authorities. It is not known what proportion of other reportable injuries to people employed in the chemical industry go unreported, but it is thought that it may be less than 50 per cent.

Salmonella

46. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work the employment medical advisory service is currently undertaking on salmonella poisoning in poultry workers.

105. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work the employment medical advisory service is currently undertaking on salmonella poisoning in poultry workers.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment medical advisory service is not aware of any cases of salmonella poisoning in poultry workers. However, the Health and Safety Executive has established a task force on occupational zoonoses, that is, diseases transmissable from animals to man. The task force will be considering the possible transmission of salmonella in the workplace as part of its remit. It will also be examining proposals for a study to investigate salmonella in air from poultry houses.

King's Cross Fire

54. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the Health and Safety Executive's research budget was expended as a result of the King's Cross fire investigations.

Mr. Nicholls: Some 5 per cent. of the budget of the executive's research and laboratory services division was expended on the King's Cross fire investigation.

Dangerous Machinery

55. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to improve current standards relating to the guarding of dangerous machinery.

Mr. Nicholls: I am satisfied that the standards required under United Kingdom legislation for the guarding of machinery are already high and I see no need for further legislation at present. However, we are awaiting the adoption of two European Community directives which may require some changes to United Kingdom legislation in due course.

Health and Safety Executive (Research)

56. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of the Health and Safety Executive's medical division budget for extra-mural research in 1986, 1987, 1988 and the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholls: Annual budgets for extramural biomedical research managed by the Health and Safety Executive's medical division for each of the four years are as follows:

Year	£
1986-87	1,411,000
1987-88	1,435,000
1988-89	1,506,000
1989-90	1,529,000

Young People (Fatalities)

59. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged 18 and under have been killed at work in each of the past three years.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures from all enforcing authorities show that in the year ended 31 March 1987, a total of 21 young people aged 16 to 18 were reported as killed in the couse of their employment. The corresponding provisional figure for the year ended 31 March 1988 is 19. I regret that figures for earlier years are not available on this basis.

Wages Inspectorate (Prosecutions)

62. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were undertaken by the wages inspectorate south-east division in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: Four prosecutions were instituted by the south-east division in the last 10 years. One of these was in 1986, two in 1987 and one in 1988.

Wages Inspectorate (Wales)

65. Mrs. Clwyd To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reduction in the wages inspectorate in Wales and its impact on rates of pay in Mountain Ash and the Cynon Valley.

Mr. Nicholls: The reduction of inspection activity in Wales was part of a general reduction throughout Great Britain in 1986-87. It reflected the simpler and quicker task of checking compliance with wages orders and the expectation that the level of compliance would rise following the reform of the wages council system in 1986. There is no simple link between wages inspection and rates of pay, but in Wales, as in Great Britain as a whole, the percentage of workers found to be underpaid in checks by the wages inspectorate has reduced. Inspection results are not available for areas smaller than Wales as a whole.

Skill Training

74. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the national training task force to discuss the improvement of levels of skill amongst the United Kingdom work force.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have frequent meetings with Mr. Wolfson, the chairman of the national training task force. He will be advising me on the establishment of the new training and enterprise councils and their plans for improving the skills of the work force in their area.

Productivity

75. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in productivity for the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Productivity in manufacturing, as measured by output per person employed, was 6·5 per cent. greater in the three months ending February 1989 than in the corresponding period ending February 1988. This compares favourably with the average of 4·2 per cent. a year recorded for the period 1979 to 1988. Since 1980 growth in United Kingdom manufacturing productivity has exceeded that of the other major industrialised countries.

Productivity for the economy as a whole was 0·5 per cent. higher in the fourth quarter of 1988 than it was in the fourth quarter of 1987. However the 1988 figure was adversely affected by the Piper Alpha disaster and other oil industry interruptions.

VDUs (Health Risks)

76. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is currently being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive's medical division on the health risks of visual display units.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has published a guidance note and a free booklet on VDUs and is participating in the development of national and international standards for VDUs, including discussions within the European Community on a proposed VDU directive. The executive is also supporting four research projects in universities and research institutes on, or directly related to working with VDUs.

British Venture Capital Association

78. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Venture Capital Association to discuss the development of small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have no immediate plans to meet the chairman of the BVCA in the near future but I do have regular contact with the association.

Agriculture (Accidents)

79. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of accidents that go unreported in the agriculture industry.

Mr. Nicholls: All cases of fatal injury in the course of agricultural work activities are reported to the Health and Safety Executive's Her Majesty's agricultural inspectorate. It is not known what proportion of other reportable accidents from agricultural activities go unreported, but it is thought to be more than 50 per cent.

104. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many children died in accidents on agricultural premises in 1974, 1979, 1984 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The figures for fatal accidents to children under the age of 16 years on agricultural premises for the years in question are:

	Number
1974	25
1979	24
[1]1988	10

119. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates for agriculture in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for employees is shown in the table. It has not been possible to produce a series of injury rates for the large number of self-employed and others involved in agricultural activity.

Injury rates per 100,000 employees in the agricultural industry[1]

	Fatal injuries	Major injuries[2]
1974	8·7	n/a
1978	7·1	n/a
[3]1987-88	5·8	152·8

[1] Defined as minimum list heading 001 of the 1968 standard industrial classification in 1974 and 1978 and class 01 of the 1980 SIC in 1987-88.

[2] The classification of injuries as major was first introduced in 1981.

[3] Provisional.

Community Programme

82. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline recent or proposed changes in the community programme.

Mr. Nicholls: From 5 September 1988 the community programme was replaced by the adult training programme, employment training.

Unemployment Register

84. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will review the Government's ruling which prevents men over 60 years from registering as unemployed.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no ruling preventing men aged over 60 from claiming unemployment benefit in the normal way. Under a special concession men, over 60 who do not qualify for UB or whose entitlement is exhausted may claim income support and—or be credited with national insurance contributions without regularly attending the unemployment benefit office to sign on as unemployed. Jobcentre services are available to everyone, regardless of whether they are claiming at a UBO and staff are happy to discuss options with anyone seeking work, whatever their age.

Enterprise Agencies

86. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his future plans for enterprise agencies.

Mr. Cope: Responsibility for the future development of local enterprise agencies, which are independent private sector led organisations, rests primarily with their boards and private sector backers.

The introduction of training and enterprise councils will provide those LEAs able to demonstrate high-quality service with the opportunity to contract for counselling and other enterprise programmes.

Elderly People (Job Prospects)

88. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps the Government has taken to improve job prospects for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Government believe that the best way to improve job prospects for all age groups is to maintain a strong economy and to allow the labour market to work efficiently. Recruitment decisions must be left to employers, but in making them they should not discriminate unfairly on age grounds. Demographic trends make it particularly important at present that the contribution which older workers can make to the economy is fully utilised. We are putting these messages across to employers through various media, and I am encouraged by evidence that some firms are already adopting a more positive approach in their recruitment and employment practices.

Construction Industry (Training)

108. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the current statutory arrangements for training in the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Construction Industry Training Board was established by the Industrial Training (Construction Board) Order 1964 for the purpose of encouraging the adequate training of persons employed or intending to be employed in the construction industry.

As envisaged in the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm. 540) I have asked the chairman of the board to bring forward proposals for future arrangements.

Mining (Accidents)

109. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates in mining in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

131. Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and major injury rates in mining in 1974, 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is shown in the table:

Injuries in the mining industry reported to enforcing authorities[5]

	Fatal	Serious/ major	Incidence rates (per 100,000 employees) Fatal	Serious/ major

[5] Provisional data for the year commencing 1 April 1987.

136. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of accidents in coal mining in the last 12 months occurred in private coal mines.

Mr. Nicholls: Provisional accident figures for the 12-month period ending 31 March 1989 indicate that fatal and major injuries at private coal mines represented 10 per cent. and 3·3 per cent. respectively of the total reported accidents in these categories at all coal mines.

It is not possible to differentiate the over three-day accidents recorded under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 without incurring disproportionate cost.

Skill Shortages

111. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received in the last six months regarding skill shortages in the south-east.

Mr. Cope: In addition to seven questions asked in the House, we have been approached by two organisations in the last six months, regarding skill shortages in the south-east or in London.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

117. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the target figure for the number of nuclear installations inspectors to be in post by 1 April 1989; and what are the target figures for 1 April 1990 and 1 April 1991.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive planned to have 140 nuclear installations inspectors in post on 1 April 1989 and to increase this to 160 by 1 April 1990. Staffing beyond these dates depends on future work loads which cannot be predicted with precision.

Young Workers (Accidents)

121. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive to discuss the accident rates of young people at work.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend's meeting with representatives of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive cover the full range of their responsibilities.

Young people's accident rates have been raised in correspondence in the context of the Department's consultative document "Restrictions on the Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in legislation".

124. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends taking to reduce the number of accidents to young people at work.

Mr. Nicholls: Latest figures from the Health and Safety Executive suggest that injury rates for young people aged 16 to 24 are now lower than the corresponding injury rates for employees as a whole. The Government will continue to support the efforts of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive to reduce accidents to workers of all ages.

Secondary Industrial Action

125. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the proposals contained in his Green Paper to reform further the law covering secondary industrial action.

Mr. Nicholls: Our Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" was published on 20 March and the closing date for comments is 20 June. We are, therefore, in the very early stages of the consultation period. To date, one representation has been received on these Green Paper proposals.

"Employment for the 1990s"

126. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received in response to the White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s."

Mr. Cope: We have received several hundred representations following publication of the White Paper "Employment for the 1990s", the majority of which have expressed interest in and support for the introduction of training and enterprise councils. The prospectus inviting local groups led by employers to submit proposals for forming training and enterprise councils in their areas was published on 10 March.

Agriculture Safety Inspectorate

127. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the frequency with which the agricultural safety inspectorate plans to visit all the premises for which it is responsible.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectorate's programme of preventive visits is planned on the basis of a rating system. There is no fixed period between inspections; premises with poor standards, poor management or high-risk potential being inspected more frequently. Visits to investigate accidents, dangerous occurrences and complaints are made on a reactive basis.

Harbour Areas (Safety)

130. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations in harbour areas.

Mr. Nicholls: The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations which come into force on 1 October, will apply to any store-based work activities in harbour areas where substances hazardous to health are used or given off. The only exceptions will be asbestos, lead and ionising radiations which are covered by other regulations.

The regulations will also apply to certain activities on board ships in dock. The COSHH will not impose duties on the master or crew of a seagoing ship or their employer in relation to the normal shipboard activities of a ship crew under the direction of a master.

Food and Environment Protection Act

132. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training and information has been given to the agricultural inspectorate on environmental assessment associated with the Food and Environment Protection Act.

Mr. Nicholls: Prior to undertaking their enforcement responsibilities under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural inspectors are given a week's specific training on the requirements and implications of the Act. This is supplemented as required by further local and national training.

Agricultural Inspectors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agricultural inspectors were conducting preventive inspections on the following dates, 6 June 1988, 7 September 1988 and 23 January 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Agricultural inspectors in the Health and Safety Executives area offices are not employed solely on preventive inspections but also make visits in response to accidents or other incidents, complaints, inquiries or to follow up previously identified shortcomings.

Staffing figures are recorded on the first of each month. The numbers of agricultural inspectors in area offices on 1 June 1988, 1 September 1988 and 1 February 1989 were 137, 145 and 142 respectively.

Training Scheme Allowance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on (a) the future operation of the employment training scheme allowance following the introduction of the community charge in Scotland and (b) his plans for its operation in England and Wales after April 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: As announced on 12 April, the benefit-related part of employment training, training allowances will be increased in line with the general uprating in benefits. When he announced this uprating on 27 October 1988, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security explained how the new levels of benefit allow for individual liability for the community charge in Scotland, England and Wales.

Pesticides (Wildlife)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice or recommendations he has received from the Health and Safety Executive on the enforcement of existing, or introduction of new, legislation as a means of helping to reduce the use of pesticides against wildlife.

Mr. Nicholls: The advisory committee on pesticides advises Ministers on pesticides and their usage. All pesticides undergo a full environmental safety assessment before being approved by Ministers for use.

The Health and Safety Executive enforces all aspects of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 under the terms of an agency agreement. However, where incidents affecting wildlife come to the attention of HSE's inspectors, they refer them to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which has existing arrangements for investigating such incidents.

Hazardous Substances

50. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the differences between the assessment processes required under the Asbestos and Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no significant differences.

53. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training is being provided for Health and Safety Executive employees on the implementation and enforcement of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

99. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training is being provided for Health and Safety Executive employees on the implementation and enforcement of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has established a comprehensive programme of internal conferences and special meetings to train its employees on the aspects of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations appropriate to their individual responsibilities. Although the principles of occupational hygiene now enshrined in the regulation are not new to Health and Safety Executive inspectors, doctors and scientists, the training and briefing on the implementation of the regulations now being provided will ensure a consistent approach.

Labour Statistics

31. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are registered as unemployed in Greater London; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

38. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of people employed in a part-time capacity within the employment areas of South Yorkshire; and what was the comparable position 10 years ago.

Mr. Lee: The available information on a comparable basis is from censuses of employment taken in September 1981 and September 1984. The table gives the available information for each of the travel-to-work areas in South Yorkshire.

More up-to-date estimates from the September 1987 census of employment will become available later this year.

Employees in part-time employment[1] in the travel-to-work areas in South Yorkshire

Travel-to-work areas	September 1981	September 1984
Barnsley	14,400	13,700
Doncaster	17,300	18,600
Rotherham and Mexborough	17,500	19,900
Sheffield[2]	53,400	56,200

[1] Excludes the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces; part-time workers are defined as those working for not more than 30 hours a week.

[2] Not wholly within South Yorkshire.

For the county, the September 1981 and September 1984 figures for employees in part-time employment were 100,000 and 105,800 respectively.

The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

52. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people aged 16 to 18 years were jobless in June 1983 and March 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In March 1989 there were 2,457 people under 18 in the United Kingdom claiming unemployment-related benefits. There were an estimated 190,800 in June 1983.

The recent extension of the guaranteed offer of a YTS place to all those aged under 18 not in full-time education or employment means there is now no need for these young people to be unemployed. Consequently, only a few now remain entitled to unemployment-related benefits following the associated changes from September 1988 in the benefit regulations for people aged under 18.

57. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of employment in the west midlands.

The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

This represents an increase of 229,000 or 29 per cent. since December 1983. The civilian work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

This self-employment estimate incorporates the latest LFS results, and will be subject to sampling error.

The comparison is affected by seasonal influences and slightly by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to remove over-recording.

These included 12 reviews of particular parts of the organisation conducted by the Executive's management review section; four other internal reviews; and three independent(externally led) reviews.

Staffing and other resources requirements for the executive are reviewed annually by the commission in preparation for the public expenditure planning round.

43. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many scientists have left the Health and Safety Executive in the last 12 months; and how many were retirements and how many were resignations.

58. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional staff the Health and Safety Executive required as a consequence of the passing of the lead regulations; and how many staff the executive estimated it would require at the initial drafting stage.

Mr. Nicholls: None in both cases. The enforcement of the regulations was expected to be, and has been, integrated into normal inspection arrangements.

Information is not available on a comparable basis for the previous year. The estimate excludes senior management time and a significant proportion of staff time on other HSE functions which derives directly or indirectly from EC initiatives.

71. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff were employed by the Health and Safety Executive's directorate of information and advice services in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholls: The allocation of expenditure between travel and subsistence and other items of running cost is a matter for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The commission has only once in the last five years (in 1987-88) sought additional running cost provision during the year. Ministers agreed to this in full.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa (Sanctions)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the issue of nuclear sanctions against South Africa will be on the agenda for the forthcoming Council of Ministers meeting in Granada, Spain, on 15 and 16 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There was no discussion of nuclear sanctions against South Africa at Granada, although the possibility of South Africa's accession to the non-proliferation treaty was noted and EC Foreign Ministers agreed to keep it under review.

It remains our policy not to supply any materials or equipment to South Africa which would aid her nuclear programme. This policy is exercised through the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985.

Prisoner Repatriation Agreements

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report the progress made on concluding prisoner repatriation agreements with Egypt, Peru and Thailand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Details of our negotiations with Foreign Governments are confidential. However, the present position is as follows.

The agreement with Egypt was to have been signed in Cairo in December 1988. Unfortunately, this did not prove possible. Discussions continue.

The Peruvians proposed a revised draft text of a proposed agreement in July 1988. Further discussions will shortly take place with the Government of Peru.

A Thai delegation is expected in London in the next few months to discuss the outstanding points on the proposed agreement with Thailand.

British Citizens (Convictions)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out, for each of the last five years for which figures are available, the number of British citizens who are convicted of offences abroad and who have not received custodial sentences, giving the nature of the offences and the sentences passed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is unavailable. There is no requirement for us to be notified of non-custodial sentences enforced on British nationals by foreign courts.

Turkey (Detentions)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Turkey regarding the detention of Dr. Nihat Sargin and Mr. Haydon Kutlu; and what effect Turkey's continued detention of political prisoners has on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Turkey's application for admission to the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The Turkish Government are well aware of our concern about such cases, and our expectation that they should respect and abide by the human rights conventions to which they are a party.

Turkey's application to join the EC has been referred to the Commission for its opinion. Once available, the Council of Ministers will consider it further, taking into account all relevant factors including Turkey's human rights record.

TRANSPORT

King's Cross Fire

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now authorise the reimbursement of the legal costs of the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority in relation to its representation at the King's Cross public inquiry.

Mr. Portillo: We see no reason to question Mr. Fennell's judgment, reached after careful consideration of representations from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority, that it was not appropriate that it should receive an order for costs, notwithstanding his acknowledgement of the substantial contribution made to the proceedings by the authority.

"The Road User and the Law"

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received to date to the White Paper, "The Road User and the Law".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have had over 90 representations from hon. Members, interested organisations and members of the public. We welcome the enthusiastic public response that the White Paper has received.

M5 (Wellington Access)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the closure of the southern exit off the M5 motorway at junction 26 and its consequences for access to Wellington; why the closure is necessary; and what temporary signposting measures he is taking to assist southbound motorway traffic heading for Wellington.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The work involves the complete reconstruction of about one mile of the southbound carriageway including that length through the interchange abutting the southbound slip road, which has to be closed for reasons of practicality and safety. The work should be completed before the spring bank holiday.

Signs warning of the closure were installed at junctions 25 and 26 about four weeks before work started. The diversionary routes are well signed on the M5, A38 and A358 at strategic positions. These routes are little longer but may take more time depending on the level of traffic congestion in Taunton.

Representations have been received from the Wellington chamber of trade, a local manufacturer and a member of the public, concerning the alternative route through Taunton and its signing.

M1-M25 Junction

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 April to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, when he expects to conclude his consideration of what remedial action is required to ease the way for traffic leaving the M1 and joining the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to make an announcement in early summer following completion of the current comprehensive review of the road programme.

M1 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 April to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, what action he will be taking to reduce congestion during peak hours to restore traffic flows between junctions 9 and 10 of the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are seeking to increase capacity, assist traffic flow and offer improved alternative roads.

Our current programme includes the provision of climbing lanes for use by slow moving heavy goods vehicles in both directions from junction 9. The northbound one will extend the whole length between junctions 9 and 10, creating an extra lane. The southbound one will extend 1·41 km. from junction 9. Work is planned for 1991-92.

The possibility of further improvement is being considered in the current review of the road programme.

Motorways (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current hourly traffic flow standards for (a) two-lane motorways and (b) three-lane motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department uses "design reference flows" rather than traffic flow standards when designing motorways. These indicate only the starting point for detailed economic and operational assessment of options.

The Department's design reference flows for a dual three-lane motorway range from 50,000 to 79,000 vehicles per annual average day in the design year (15 years after the road opens). Comparable figures for a two-lane motorway are 28,000 to 54,000 vehicles per day.

The capacity of roads is substantially greater than design reference flows.

Road Building

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government financial assistance has been allocated to county road building and improvement programmes for 1988-89 and for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 108 local highway authorities in England were given a total capital allocation of £567·111 million for capital expenditure in 1988-89 on road building and improvements. Of this £191 million was provided by way of transport supplementary grant towards the cost of schemes of more than local importance. The corresponding figures for 1989-90 are £513 million and £204 million respectively.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government financial assistance has been allocated to East Sussex's road building and improvement programme for 1988-89 and for 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: East Sussex county council was given a capital allocation of £7·180 million for expenditure on road building and improvements in 1988-89. Of this £2·121 million was provided by way of transport supplementary grant towards the cost of schemes of more than local importance. The corresponding figures for 1989-90 are £6·720 million and £2·482 million respectively.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for transport safety of the decision to withdraw the services of watchmen from the Forth rail bridge.

Mr. Portillo: Whilst this is a management matter for British Rail, which considers that the decision does not endanger safety, I understand that watchmen's duties were to guard against risk of fire from steam trains and to deter trespassers when the only other means of crossing the Forth was by ferry.

Derbyshire (Traffic Problems)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a departmental inquiry into traffic problems in Dronfield, Derbyshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An A61 Trunk road bypass on Dronfield was opened in October 1975. Any traffic problems within Dronfield are a matter for the local highway authority, Derbyshire county council.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or one planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It would be extremely difficult to draw up a complete inventory of all the Department's publicity material (posters, leaflets, TV and radio "fillers", etc) which are likely to be issued or broadcast during the current quarter. Nor could all this material be properly dignified with the title of "campaign".

The Department produces a wide range of publicity material, particularly in the road safety field, which will be available throughout the period in question. Specific campaigns to be conducted during the first three months of 1989-90 are as follows:

—child seat belts ("Belt Up in The Back") from 24 April

—merchant navy reserve from 17 May —drink/drive ("Drinking and Driving Wrecks Lives") from 12 June to mid July.

Only the drink-drive campaign involves television advertising.

We try, with limited success, to offer information constantly for news and current affairs coverage of the causes of road casualties.

Road Accidents

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to take to reduce the number of pedestrian accidents.

Mr. Channon: I have today announced a series of proposals in a document "Pedestrian Safety: Making Walking Safer". I am placing copies in the Library. The measures include:

1. A major pilot "Traffic Club" demonstration for pre-school children, funded by General Accident, and covering some half a million children.
2. Proposals to amend the road hump regulations so as to allow them to be used more widely, and to help and encourage local authorities with area wide traffic calming and urban safety schemes.
3. A campaign this autumn to encourage the greater use of reflective material on children's clothing.
4. Enlisting the help of the motoring organisations in improving driver awareness of pedestrian safety.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of General Accident's support for the Government's efforts to reduce road accidents and road casualties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: General Accident has supported the Government's road safety efforts magnificently. Its initiatives since 1986 have included:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Publicity Campaigns

4. Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is not currently involved in any publicity campaigns. However, a teacher recruitment publicity campaign mounted by the teaching as a career unit has recently been completed. This included newspaper advertising but not television advertising. The campaign has attracted over 10,000 responses. There are no plans at present for any Departmental publicity campaigns in the first three months of the financial year 1989-90.

Under-Fives

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to reply to the report of the Select Committee on Education, Science and Arts entitled "Educational Provision for the Under Fives".

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have sent the Government's response to this report to the Chairman of the Committee today. A copy has been placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry (Security)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what steps are taken to ensure that the security arrangements at the land registry in Nottingham are sufficient to ensure that documents remain confidential and are not disposed of in public places; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: All the normal security arrangements to be found in government offices obtain for the Nottingham district land registry. Those arrangements at Nottingham, as at all district registries, remain under constant review to ensure that documents are in safe custody. A small number of papers stolen from the Nottingham district land registry have recently been recovered. An urgent, independent investigation is being conducted into the loss of these documents, and the circumstances of their recovery.

Commonhold

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to make a decision on implementation of the recommendation of the working group of the Law Commission on commonhold, Cm. 179; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor hopes to be in a position to announce a decision on the implementation of the Law Commission working group report on commonhold during the summer. Work is continuing at the Law Commission on the preparation of draft legislation to give effect to the report.

PRIME MINISTER

Hospitals (Norwich)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the last three years, she has met medical consultants concerning the location of the second district general hospital in the Norwich health district.

The Prime Minister: As the House is aware, my normal practice is and will continue to be neither to confirm nor to deny whether meetings with private individuals have taken place, even in those cases where no such meeting has occurred.

ENERGY

Efficiency Expenditure

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much will be spent by his Department in the next financial year in energy efficiency work; and what was the expenditure of his Department five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Parkinson: Expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency programmes was £2·4 million in 1979-80 and £17·5 million in 1984-85. The provision for expenditure by the energy efficiency office in 1989-90 is £15 million as published in the supply estimates.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Parkinson: As at 1 April 1989 there were no women in grades 1 to 4; three (7 per cent.) at grade 5; one (5 per cent.) at grade 6; and 18 (12·5 per cent.) at grade 7. Information on ethnic origin in these grades is not yet available.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: A survey was completed in 1986 and a further survey is planned later this year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department, which is an equal opportunities employer, does not itself recruit to senior posts. The Civil Service Commission recruits to these positions, following equal opportunities procedures.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or campaigns planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Parkinson: There is a continuing programme of publicity to promote the work of the Department's energy efficiency office, offshore supplies office and the use of renewable sources of energy. None of these campaigns will involve television advertising.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment and Training

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he next plans to visit the Fylde coast area to discuss matters relating to Civil Service recruitment and training.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so. However, I am pleased to note that, in terms of the north-western region as a whole, numbers of civil servants have been increasing in recent years, a period when overall numbers in the service and numbers in the south-east have declined. I am sure that the relative attractiveness of the region for departmental recruitment has been an important factor in this.

THE ARTS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, respectively, and overall in his Office are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Luce: The number, and percentage, of women officers in grades 2, 5, 6, 7, and overall, in the Department, are given in the table. The Department does not employ anyone at grades 1, 3 and 4.

	Number of women in grade	Percentage
Grade 2	—	—
Grade 5	1	25
Grade 6	1	100
Grade 7 (and equivalent)	4	33
Departmental total	27	45

My information is that none of the staff of the Office of Arts and Libraries is a member of the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts when his Office last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The last survey was conducted in 1986. There are no plans to repeat it, but the ethnic origins of all new entrants to the Office of Arts and Libraries are monitored on a continuous basis by the Cabinet Office.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Trade

84. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects Britain's trade to be in balance.

88. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects the balance of trade to be positive.

89. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects Britain's trade to be in balance.

91. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects Britain's trade to be in balance.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 shows a forecast of a deficit in visible trade in 1989. Forecasts of the balance in later years are not published.

85. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the level of the parameters of inaccuracy for the balance of trade.

Mr. Major: The estimates for trade in goods are generally considered to be of fairly high quality. Figures for trade in services are subject to much wider margins of error.

There are considerable difficulties in measuring the United Kingdom's balance of payments account as a whole, and over the last three years, the "balancing item" has averaged £14 billion per year. The "balancing item" reflects errors and omissions in both the current and capital account.

Trade Deficit

86. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he now expects to be the trade deficit in 1989.

Mr. Major: The Financial and Budget Report for 1988-89 shows a forecast deficit for visible trade in 1989 of £21½ billion.

Manufacturing Trade Deficit

87. Mr. Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the manufacturing trade deficit in 1989.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 shows a forecast deficit in manufactured trade in 1989 of £15½ billion.

90. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the deficit in trade in manufactures for 1990-91.

Mr. Major: The Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1989-90 provides a forecast of the manufactured trade balance for 1989 only. Forecasts of the balance in later years are not published.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information in his reply dated 28 July 1988, Official Report, columns 497-98, concerning the United Kingdom net contribution to the European Community budget; and if he will add forecasts for 1989, 1990 and 1991, drawing attention to any differences between these figures, and those used for the estimates in table 21.2.2 of Cm 21.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 18 April 1989]: The updated figures are set out in the table. An estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution in 1989 will be contained in the statement on the 1989 Community budget, to be published later in the month. It is not the Government's practice to publish calendar year forecasts for future years.

[1] United Kingdom figures show payments to the Community budget on a cash flow basis. Budget refunds and abatements are credited to the year they are paid.
[2] Constant prices have been constructed using the GDP deflator at market prices.

Third World Debt

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on what percentage of the capital of British banks was represented by outstanding loans by major Third world borrowers in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 April 1989]: The percentage of the capital of major British clearing banks with exposure to highly indebted Third world countries represented by outstanding loans to those countries in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Figures
1984	179
1985	128
1986	103
1988	65

The figures for exposure do not take account of the provisions made by the banks against their loans to these countries. Net of provisions the banks' exposure to these countries represented 44 per cent. of their capital in 1988 (56 per cent. in 1987).

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

	Women		Ethnic minorities[1]
	Number	Percentage of staff in grade	Ethnic Number[2]	Percentage of staff in grade

Grade 7	43	16	0	0
Total for Department[3]	1,241	39	115	[4]4·8

[1] Information on ethnic origins was provided on a voluntary basis.
[2] In accordance with the Department's Code of Practice governing the use of ethnic data, figures for ethnic minorities have been rounded to the nearest 5 to preserve confidentiality; the [2] denotes less than 3. The percentages have been calculated on the basis of unrounded data.
[3] Equivalent information on ethnic origins of industrial staff is not available.
[4] Because of [3] above, the percentage quoted is based on the figure for non-industrial staff only.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My department conducted an ethnic survey of all its non-industrial staff during 1986; updating and monitoring information on the ethnic origins of our staff is a continuous process.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Brooke: The Civil Service Commission is responsible for recruitment to the top grades in my Department.

Internal Market

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total value to the latest available full year of public sector contracts in England of a character which will make them open to Community-wide bidding as part of the creation of the internal market.

Mr. Brooke: None. The cost of assessing the value of public contracts in England to be opened to Community-wide bidding would not be justified. The European Commission is currently investigating the effect of applying procurement rules to contracts above various value thresholds in sectors excluded from the existing Community directives.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms in England were advised by agricultural development advisory service staff about methods of controlling agricultural pollution in each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not available in the form requested.

Grain Stores

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many grain stores the intervention board owns and manages on his behalf; if he will publish in the Official Report the location, size in square feet or volume, the capacity and the approximate value of each; how and by whom each of these stores is managed; how and by whom the managers are recruited and appointed and how much they are paid; and which of the stores has returned a profit or a loss and of what order, in each of the financial years 1980 to 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The intervention board does not own any intervention grain stores but rents eight Government-owned properties from the Property Services Agency estates. Details of the locations, volumes, capacities, values and managing companies are given in the table. Managing companies are contracted by the intervention board after selection by competitive tender. Information on amounts paid to individual companies is commercially confidential. The stores are used exclusively to store intervention grain or oilseeds and the intervention board derives no income from their use other than the European Community's contributions at standard rates towards handling and storage costs. In terms of the cost per tonne of grain or oilseeds handled and stored, they are fully competitive with the commercial stores contracted for intervention storage.

MV Perintis

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what information he based his opinion recorded in the preamble to the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Sea Fish) (Revocation) Order 1989, S.I., 1988, No. 619, that the toxic substances which escaped as a result of the sinking of the MV Perintis were not in the area designated in the schedule to the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Sea Fish) Order, S.I., 1989, No. 529.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The precautionary ban on fishing was lifted after the French navy had completed an intensive search of the sea-bed in the area concerned. I understand their search operation extended over two weeks and involved a number of specially equipped surface ships and submersibles at a cost of over 8 million French francs but they were unable to find the lindane container in the area where they previously suspected it had sunk. In addition, the results of fish and water sampling which we and the French authorities were carrying out revealed no evidence of lindane leakage in this area.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the types and approximate number of fishing vessels registered in the United Kingdom and other countries, which have been, or are likely to be, affected by the precautionary fishing ban, invoked by the Minister, under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 following the foundering of the vessel Perintis on 13 March.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The precautionary fishing ban, which applied to United Kingdom and Channel Islands vessels between 21 March and 7 April, covered an area of sea lying within a radius of seven nautical miles, centred on the position where the container of lindane was presumed to have sunk.

For part of the period the area was unsuitable for fishing because of poor weather and tidal conditions.

The area is used for potting by six vessels from Alderney. No English or other Channel Island vessels are understood to take significant catches from the area.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the methods of monitoring instituted by his Ministry, following the loss of the MV Perintis in the Channel on or about 13 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Immediately following the sinking of the MV Perintis, my Ministry undertook a programme of monitoring of water and biological material (fish and crabs) from around the wreck of the vessel and from the area in which the container of lindane was presumed to have sunk. This programme has since been extended to include fish landed at south coast ports. The results of the monitoring indicate that there has been no leakage of the permethrin, cypermethrin or lindane being carried by the vessel.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations are taking place regarding the retrieval of the container containing five tonnes of organochlorine insecticide, lindane, which was lost when the vessel Perintis foundered north-west of Guernsey on or about 13 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials have kept in close touch with the Department of Transport, the Home Office, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department of Health and the Department of the Environment in connection with the search by the French authorities for the container of lindane lost from the MV Perintis on 13 March. Contacts were maintained with the French authorities both directly and through the Department of Transport, which has lead responsibility for marine pollution control operations. Officials from my Department participated in a meeting with French and Channel Island experts on 4 April to review the degree of threat to the marine environment posed by this container of lindane.

Piper Alpha Platform

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the role performed by his Department in the monitoring of the area above and on the seabed surrounding the wreckage of Piper Alpha; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Monitoring in the area concerned is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Beef Special Premium

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to switch the beef special premium from its present administration to on-farm administration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The beef special premium scheme has been in operation for just over two weeks. I have no plans to change its administration in Great Britain at present. However, as my right hon. Friend announced on 6 March we shall be reviewing the operation of the scheme with my colleagues in other Departments to assess the practicability and cost-effectiveness of moving to an on-farm operation in due course.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he established the beef special premium as an off-farm administration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have had only a very short time in which to make arrangements for the operation of the beef special premium scheme in Great Britain. As my right hon. Friend announced on 6 March, we concluded that in the first instance it was desirable to build on the arrangements then in place for the operation of the beef variable premium scheme and thus to operate the scheme at live markets and abattoirs. This method of operation has the further advantage of enabling producers to apply for premium under the new scheme in much the same way and at the same marketing stage as they like to apply for beef variable premium. In practice, the transition to the new arrangements has been effective relatively smoothly, largely in consequence of this decision.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that those British owners of fishing vessels who have not yet been issued with full or temporary certificates despite submission of bona fide applications are not in any way disadvantaged in terms of access to fishing quotas and grounds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I understand that the Department of Transport has now issued full or temporary certificates to all applicants fulfilling the necessary requirements. Fishing entitlements for such vessels have not been affected by the introduction of the new registration arrangements.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The current publicity campaigns being conducted by my Department and planned for the first three months of 1989-90 are as follows:

On-going campaigns:

- Imports
- Rabies
- Food
  - additives
  - labelling
  - surveillance
- Farm and conservation grants scheme
- Recruitment
- Farm woodlands
- Environmentally sensitive areas
- Diversification

Planned campaigns:

- Plant health—May 1989 to October 1989
- Colorado beetle—May 1989 to June 1989
- Food nutrition—April 1989 ongoing
- Food safety (joint with Department of Health)—May 1989 ongoing.

No campaigns use paid TV advertising.

Potatoes

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will announce his conclusions following the review of potato market policy.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends and I have considered the many replies to the consultation document.

I have also just completed meetings with various producer and processor interests. We now need time to reflect on the conclusions to be drawn from this exercise. I do not at present envisage an announcement before the end of May.

SCOTLAND

Tweed Towards 2000 Symposium

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what is the estimated total cost related to participation by civil servants at the Tweed Towards 2000 symposium to be held in May; and if any charge is being made by his Department to the organisers of the symposium for this service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Five scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland laboratories at Aberdeen and Pitlochry were invited to participate in the symposium on Saturday 6 and Sunday 7 May 1989 by the organisers, the Tweed Foundation. The scientists will be attending in their own time with their travelling and accommodation costs being met by the Tweed Foundation. A charge by the Scottish Office for their services would not be appropriate in the circumstances.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if L-Threonine is available on the National Health Service for the treatment of motor neurone disease;

(2) how many people in Scotland suffer from motor neurone disease.

(3) if he will list the drugs available on the National Health Service for sufferers from motor neurone disease in Scotland;

(4) what representations he has received about the availability of L-Threonine.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the NHS, general medical practitioners have freedom to prescribe whatever drugs they consider to be clinically necessary for the treatment of their patients, except items which are excluded under the selected list scheme. Foods and food supplements are not normally prescribable and L-Threonine is more properly classed as a food supplement than as a drug. Doctors can, however, prescribe food supplements where they are, in their clinical judgment, necessary for the treatment of patients but may be asked to justify their prescribing by their area medical committee. Exact information on the numbers of people in Scotland suffering from motor neurone disease is not centrally available. There are no drugs which are specifically recommended for the treatment of motor neurone disease. Representations have been received from the hon. Members for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) and for Livingston (Mr. Cook) and from two general medical practitioners.

Community Charge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the decision not to allow the sale of the extract of the community charge register was taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The decision was taken after careful consideration of representations made by the Data Protection Registrar and others that the sale of the publicly available community charges register was not an essential part of the community charge system and that there would be a potential threat to privacy if extracts were made too readily available to interests who might wish to use them as mailing lists.

Police Rent Allowance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consult local authorities about the possibility of introducing a temporary flat rate allowance for officers in provided accommodation in Scotland to take account of their requirement to pay the community charge and pending the final outcome of the rent allowance arbitration.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. This matter was considered at a meeting of the police negotiating board on 17 April when the staff side's proposal for an interim housing allowance payable to officers in provided accommodation was rejected by the official side.

However negotiations between the two sides on long-term arrangements proposed by the Police Arbitration Tribunal are continuing.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has received from police authorities in Scotland concerning the desirability of interim financial arrangements being introduced to ensure that no police officer is worse off as a result of the introduction of the community charge pending the final outcome of the recent rent allowance arbitration; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider the difficulties facing new recruits to the police forces in Scotland due to the uncertainty surrounding the financial recompense for the community charge pending the final outcome of the rent allowance arbitration; and if he will take urgent action in conjunction with the local authorities to introduce interim arrangements as suggested by the arbitrators, subject to subsequent adjustment following the Government's decision on the recommended implementation of the new housing allowance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from police authorities about this issue. In response it was made clear that the question of interim arrangements was a matter for the police negotiating board. The question was considered at a meeting of the board on 17 April when, with the position of my right hon. and learned Friend being reserved, the official side agreed the staff side's proposal that all officers in Scottish forces in receipt of rent allowance on 31 March 1989 should continue to receive the levels payable at that date pending the introduction of a new housing allowance recommended by the Police Arbitration Tribunal. There are no grounds for interim arrangements for officers entering the service after 31 March 1989.

The tribunal accepted the official side's case that the community charge payable by police officers should not be reimbursed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance

5. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many projects have been supported by regional assistance over the past year.

Mr. Newton: My Department expects to have supported in excess of 7,500 projects through regional assistance during 1988-89. Specifically, the Department has made 1,275 offers of regional selective assistance and 920 offers of regional enterprise grant, approved 5,380 projects under the revised regional development grant scheme and made payments under the original regional development grant scheme in respect of some 270 projects. All these figures are provisional.

11. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many projects have been supported by his inner-city task forces.

Mr. Newton: Since the task forces began their work in 1986 over 1,200 projects have been approved and over £38 million has been committed. These projects are projected to secure over 4,000 jobs, facilitate over 23,500 training places and provide support for over 2,600 businesses.

29. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the leaders of the inner-city task forces; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 15 March 1989 at column 256.

European Regional Development Fund

16. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the distribution of European regional development fund moneys within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: Since the inception of the European regional development fund in 1975, the United Kingdom has received commitments valued at £3,307 million. Commitments for England have been £1,602 million, for Scotland £792 million, Wales £491 million and Northern Ireland £343 million. The remaining £79 million has been committed on a multi-regional basis. The future distribution will depend on decisions by the Commission, and may fluctuate from year to year.

Internal Market

18. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent estimates his Department has made of the effects of 1992 on Britain's regions.

Mr. Maude: None. It is for individual businesses, wherever they are, to assess for themselves what the effects of the single market will be for them. My Department provides a comprehensive information service to enable them to do so.

Mergers and Acquisitions

21. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the percentage increase in expenditure on mergers and acquisitions since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Expenditure on acquisitions and mergers by industrial and commercial companies within the United Kingdom in 1988 is estimated to be about £22 billion. In current prices this is about 13 times greater than the 1979 total of about £1¾ billion.

42. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the percentage increase in expenditure on mergers and acquisitions since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Expenditure on acquisitions and mergers by industrial and commercial companies within the United Kingdom in 1988 is estimated to be about £22 billion. In current prices this is about 13 times greater than the 1979 total of about £1¾ billion.

74. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for strengthening the national network of consumer advice centres.

Mr. Forth: I have no such proposals. Funding of consumer advice centres is a matter for the local decision and local funding. The Government do fund the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, and Citizens Advice Scotland which provide central support services for local bureaux. In recent years the grant to these bodies has risen substantially in real terms. In 1980 the local bureaux took over a considerable proportion of the work of consumer advice centres.

36. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives from local authority consumer advice centres; and what matters were discussed.

58. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives from local authority consumer advice centres; and what matters were discussed.

Information Technology

24. Mr. Orme: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects Britain to have a trade surplus in information technology.

26. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects Britain to have a trade surplus in information technology.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to make a prediction of the kind that the hon. Member seeks. What is important is that this Government's economic policies have led to record levels of productivity, output and investment and have helped to attract companies such as Fujitsu which will provide a major boost to our balance of trade in imformation technology, through both exports and import substitution.

37. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on his response to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry's report into information technology.

62. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on his response to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry's report into information technology.

Mr. Newton: The Government's response to the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report on information technology published on 9 March as Cm 646 contains a comprehensive statement of the Government's policy towards information technology.

65. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the balance of trade in information technology in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Newton: For the information technology and electronics manufacturing sector the United Kingdom had an adverse balance of trade in 1979 of £444 million. In 1987, the latest full year for which figures are available, the adverse balance for this sector was £2,226 million.

80. Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the balance of trade in information technology in 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Maude: The liquidity ratio for all large industrial and commercial companies is estimated by the Department's survey to be 76 per cent. at the end of the fourth quarter of 1988 on a seasonally adjusted basis. This is the lowest figure since the end of the third quarter of 1982.

Manufacturing Productivity

27. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what proportion manufacturing productivity has increased since 1980.

Mr. Maude: In the three months to February 1989 manufacturing productivity, as measured by output per person employed, was 55 per cent. higher than the 1980 average level.

Footwear Industry

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received regarding the British footwear industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Since I replied to a similar question from the hon. Member on 15 February at column 305 of the Official Report for 16 February a number of hon. Members have made known to me the concerns of their constituents.

I am taking a close interest in this matter and in the outcome of the Commission's investigation into imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea.

Borrowers (Advice)

30. Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the range of advice available to borrowers and potential borrowers on alternative forms of credit, especially in the inner cities.

Mr. Maude: The Office of Fair Trading has a statutory duty under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to inform the public about credit. It gives advice through the media, and booklets, posters and videos which are freely available through citizens advice bureaux, trading standards departments and public libraries. In addition the banks provide a banking information service. In the inner-city areas certain local authorities have set up money advice services; and some 20 financial organisations are providing £750,000 over a period of three years for money advice and debt counselling services.

Civil Research and Development

31. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries the proportion of gross domestic product spent by Government on civil research and development has fallen since 1983.

66. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which countries in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development reduced the share of gross domestic product spent on civil research and development between 1983 and 1986; and which countries increased it.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) on 15 March at column 265.

48. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which countries in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development reduced the share of gross domestic product spent on civil research and development between 1983 and 1986; and which countries increased it.

33. Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many times in the last 10 years he has exercised his power to disbar directors of public companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Secretary of State may apply to the court to disqualify directors under various provisions now consolidated in the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Between 1 April 1979 and 28 April 1986, when the current provisions came into force, 111 applications were made. Since 28 April 1986 the number of applications has been:

	Number
1986	22
1987	180
1988	421
[1]1989	99

[1] To 31 March.

Such applications relate both to public and private companies.

The Act also empowers the courts to disqualify directors in certain criminal proceedings and where the Secretary of State brings such prosecutions it is his practice to draw the court's attention to these powers.

Industrial Investment

34. Mr. Hague: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest indications he has for the growth in industrial investment over the past year.

Mr. Maude: The volume of investment by the manufacturing, construction, distribution and financial industries in 1988 was nearly 11 per cent. higher than in 1987.

78. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the achievements of his 1992 campaign.

Mr. Maude: Since the campaign was launched on 18 March 1988, the DTI has handled over 205,000 requests for further information. Our surveys indicate that over 90 per cent. of firms throughout the country are aware of the single market challenge and that around 50 per cent. of British business is taking action or considering steps to prepare for the single market.

81. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many calls have been received to date by his Department's 1992 hotline.

Mr. Maude: I am not aware of any representations about unsolicited auto-cheque cards or other banking issues relating to Midland bank. I understand that as certain service cards are renewed some have been incorporated into a multi-purpose card but I am not aware that this has caused any difficulties.

Boeing 747 Aircraft

44. Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the Boeing 747 series of aircraft is manufactured by the British aerospace industry.

Mr. Forth: A number of United Kingdom aerospace companies participate in the Boeing 747 programme but the United Kingdom share is largely dependent upon the choice of engine. If a Rolls-Royce engine is selected, as is increasingly the case, the United Kingdom share of the initial sale value of the aircraft is 25 per cent., rising to 30 per cent. of its lifetime value once engine spares have been provided.

Consumer Rights

45. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he now has plans to bring forward legislation affecting consumer rights.

Mr. Atkins: A new management structure for Airbus Industrie, broadly based on the recommendations contained in the 1988 report of the Airbus "wise men", was introduced with effect from 1 April 1989. The new structure is intended to strengthen the strategic control of Airbus projects by the four partners in the consortium while, at the same time, placing the senior managers of Airbus Industrie at the centre of all day-to-day operations of particular Airbus programmes.

Export Science System

49. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to extend the export licence system to cover material capable of being used for torture.

Mr. Alan Clark: Licences are required for export to all destinations of military, para-military, police and security equipment which is subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, 1987, (SI 1987, No. 2070) as amended. It is not our normal practice to grant a licence for the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

It is impractical to seek to control materials capable of being used for torture, since almost any material could be put to such use.

Manufacturing Productivity

50. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which position Britain lies in an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development league table for manufacturing productivity.

Mr. Maude: No reliable comparisons exist for absolute levels of manufacturing productivity between different countries. But available figures do show that in the eighties the United Kingdom has had the fastest rate of growth of manufacturing productivity of all the major industrialised countries.

For the financial year 1988-89 the total figures were respectively £88·5 million and £9·9 million. For the financial year 1989-90 up to £154 million will be available to BAe and £12 million to Westland. The A330/340 and the EH101 are the only programmes currently receiving launch aid from the Department.

Licensed Credit Brokers (Advertising)

59. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he proposes to take to monitor the growth of advertising of loan facilities offered by licensed credit brokers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Responsibility for monitoring the day-to-day operation of the Consumer Credit Act and of the activities of licensed credit businesses are matters for local authority trading standards departments and the Office of Fair Trading. In relation to credit advertisements, I intend shortly to make new regulations under the Act governing advertisements, and my Department circulated proposals in a consultation letter dated 5 April 1989.

64. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment his Department has made of company mergers and the effect on employee rights.

Mr. Maude: Normal employee rights continue when a company is taken over.

Inward Investment

67. Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's latest indication of the value of inward investment into Britain in 1988.

Mr. Newton: Inward investment into the United Kingdom in 1988 was £11·2 billion of which £7·1 billion was direct investment and £4·1 billion was portfolio investment.

Seals (Exports)

71. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further steps he plans to take to encourage exports from companies that manufacture seals.

Mr. Maude: Comprehensive support measures are already available through the DTI export initiative to assist companies who wish to export their products.

72. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he plans to announce any new initiatives to benefit Britain's regions.

Mr. Newton Major changes in the focus of DTI's policies were made only last year. Regional policy now operates within a framework designed to encourage enterprise and economic growth in all parts of the country but with extra help available for firms in the regions.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, North of 12 April, Official Report, column 545, if he will make it his policy that in the next discussion between his Department and Ford about that company's manufacturing strategy, Ministers or officials will seek to encourage Ford to publish its own estimate of the net effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments of the transfer of the manufacture of Sierras.

Mr. Maude The transfer of Sierra manufacture from Dagenham to Genk is only one element in Ford's reorganisation which also includes expansion of Fiesta manufacture at Dagenham, of Escort manufacture at Halewood and Transit van manufacture at Southampton. The overall effect of these changes on the balance of payments is dependent on so many variables as to be impossible to estimate with any accuracy and I see no value in encouraging Ford to attempt to make such an estimate.

Bophuthatswana

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what trade is carried on between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Bophuthatswana; and what outward trade missions there have been.

Mr. Alan Clark Since Her Majesty's Government do not recognise the independent status of Bophuthatswana, UK trade statistics do not disaggregate trade figures for it or other regions within South Africa.

UK trade missions to South Africa may have visited Bophuthatswana but I am not aware of their precise itinerary.

Deregulation

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current membership of the advisory panel on deregulation; and when he will be appointing new members.

Mr. John Lawrence—Chief Executive, Thorn Security Ltd., Feltham.

Mr. Brian Prime—Proprietor, Northbay House Residential Care Home, Lowestoft.

Mr. Brian Wicks—Deputy Director General, National Farmers Union, London.

The advisory panel makes an important contribution to the enterprise and deregulation unit's work by advising them on the impact of regulatory requirements on business and enterprise development. I should like to express my gratitude to them and particularly to the four retiring members, Mr. Colin Dauris, Mr. George Gray, Mr. Damon de Laszlo and Mr. Phillip White.

These new appointments will help to ensure the panel's continuing effectiveness as a source of valuable advice.

Harrods (Report)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he now has any plans to meet the serious fraud office to discuss the publication of his Department's inspectors' report into the sale of Harrods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have nothing to add to the statement made on 3 April by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in another place and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy's reply to a Private Notice Question by the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 4 April (Official Report, cols. 19-20).

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any further progress has been made on the disposal of the subsidiaries of British Shipbuilders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Pursuant to my answer to the hon. Member of 16 March at column 282, I am pleased to report that William Steward and Company, Ltd. has now acquired British Shipbuilders' pipe work and electrical contracting subsidiary Sunderland Forge Services Ltd. This will become the centre for the Steward group's expansion into building services contracting in the north-east. The whole of William Steward's subsidiary, Durham Switch Gear Ltd., will shortly be moving its switch gear manufacturing activities, together with 135 employees, from nearby Washington into the factory previously owned by Sunderland Forge Services. William Steward's has in addition taken on nearly 200 of the previous 254 employees of Sunderland Forge Services and believes there is a good prospect of more jobs to come.

On 16 March I also told the House of my agreement to the disposal of British Shipbuilders Training Ltd. at Govan to a management team. This sale has now also been successfully completed, thereby maintaining an important training resource in Govan and south of the Clyde providing employment for 28 people in the area of training and management consultancy.

Finally, I can report that British Shipbuilders has now received a number of new bids for its design and computing subsidiary, Marine Design Consultants Ltd., based at Sunderland and Dundee. As with the new bids that have been received for Ferguson Shipbuilders Ltd., these are now being assessed by the corporation and its advisers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Horse Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will supply a detailed breakdown of all financial grants made to individual horse racecourses in Britain by the Horserace Betting Levy Board since 1987.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the board that its records are of annual totals of financial grants for direct expenditure by horse racecourses for particular purposes, not of grants to individual racecourses. For example, the annual grant of prize money is apportioned to individual racecourses by the Jockey Club.

Following is the information as to totals of grants for racecourses which is held by the board, for the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89:

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provided a list of the levels of prize moneys at each registered horse racing course in Britain for each year since 1987;

(2) if he will provide a list of all horse racing courses in Britain, by region, showing the level of attendances at each course since 1987.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the "Racing Industry Statistical Bureau Statistics", which are published by the Jockey Club, provide information on the annual totals of prize money and attendances at each approved horse race course in Britain over a period of five calendar years. The next edition of the statistics, to be published at the end of April, will therefore provide this information for 1984-88 inclusive.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will supply a list of all financial grants made by the Horserace Betting Levy Board to other horseracing bodies in Britain during 1987.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown of the distribution of the finances raised by the Horserace Betting Levy Board in each year since 1983.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested, for each financial year from 1983-84 to 1987-88 inclusive, is given in the respective annual reports of the board, copies of which are in the Library. My right hon. Friend envisages laying the board's report for 1988-89 before the House in July this year.

Depot Site (Pyrton)

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of any documents held by his Department relating to the acquisition, planning status, construction, rating and occupancy of the depot site in the parish of Pyrton in the county of Oxfordshire which have not been released to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The supply and transport branch of the Home Office occupied this depot between 10 November 1978 and 20 July 1987 under standing arrangements with the Property Services Agency. Home Office papers relate only to the administration of the depot during this period and are of a routine nature: they will in due course be disposed of under the Public Record Acts of 1958 and 1967. I understand that copies of relevant papers are being placed in the Library by the Property Services Agency.

Asylum

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute procedures within the immigration service to ensure that persons applying for asylum on entry to the United Kingdom are dealt with in accordance with procedures laid down in the immigration rules and the obligations of the United Kingdom under international law.

Mr. Renton: Such procedures are already in place.

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the reasons why the sale of the electoral register is allowed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 provide for the publication and supply of the electoral register, including supply of copies at a prescribed fee. These provisions reflect the fact that the electoral register is a public document which needs to be in wide circulation for electoral purposes; and the conclusion that its use by commercial organisations could not effectively be prevented.

Citizenship

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year since 1978, the number of citizens of the United Kingdom whose citizenship was revoked, providing the following information in each case (a) the reasons for which citizenship was revoked, (b) the country to which each individual was deported, and (c) the length of time between the granting of citizenship and its removal.

Mr. Renton: No order to deprive a person of citizenship has been made since 1973.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts are being made to recruit permanent nursing staff to Her Majesty's prison, Holloway; and what plans there are to improve C2 psychiatric unit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Campaigns to recruit permanent nursing staff are undertaken regularly. Arrangements for the next campaign are in hand. Plans to replace the present facilities for psychiatric assessment with a purpose-built unit are being pursued.

Mr. Corbyn (Islington North): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the approved complement for medical units at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway; what is the current shortfall in permanent staff; and how often agency nurses are used to make up the numbers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The approved complement of nursing staff is 84. On 17 April 1989 a total of 47 of the posts were filled and 17 others were covered by agency nurses. Agency staff have been used for some years as a consequence of recruitment difficulties in London.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long the position of health care manager/chief medical officer has been vacant at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway; and when this vacancy will be filled.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The decision to create a post of health care manager was taken in September 1987. The post has been vacant since then. An appointment has now been made and takes effect on 1 May 1989.

Guildford Four

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to facilitate ease of legal access for solicitors acting for the Guildford Four; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The inmates may be visited by their legal representatives at their current prison locations. Any request for alternative facilities would be carefully considered.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow independent medical assessors to examine the Guildford Four prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The physical and mental health of these prisoners is the responsibility of the prison medical officers of their respective establishments. Prison medical officers can arrange for a second opinion when this is clinically indicated.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments have been made by his Department to the Somerset and Avon constabulary in respect of their costs in inquiring into new evidence surrounding the conviction of the Guildford Four; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) yesterday.

Traffic Police

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for police authorities in England and Wales the number of traffic officers employed in traffic branches in each force for the years 1980, 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information for 1980 is not readily available. That for 1985 and 1988 is as follows:

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office's crime and fire prevention campaigns continue, although there is no current press or television advertising. The only other publicity campaign planned for the three month period from April to June 1989 is a small probation officer recruitment campaign, starting 17 May and finishing 31 May.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance is being given to local authorities to enable them to cope with the influx of cases being referred to them for housing benefit from April; if his Department intends to carry out a review of delays due to the change over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only category of claimant who became entitled to housing benefit for the first time from April were people in board and lodging accommodation whose housing costs were formerly met from income support. This change was part of the April 1988 reforms of social security but implementation was postponed at the request of the local authority associations. The administrative arrangements for the transfer were discussed with the local authority associations and individual timetables for implementation were agreed locally between the Department's local office and local authorities. The Government made £1 million available to local authorities for their costs in preparing for this change. In addition, the overall level of provision for local authorities' housing benefit administration costs in 1989-90 has been increased by more than £7 million because of the expected increase in work load. There is thus no reason for the changeover to result in delays. Delay in general is kept under review as part of the Department's monitoring of the social security reforms.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the borough of Walsall will receive no actual increase in total benefit in April; and what is the number who will receive a sum less than the increase paid in the retirement pension.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March at column 445.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department is running one publicity campaign involving television advertising in the first three months of 1989-90. The campaign is to promote the take-up of family credit. Paid advertising started on 13 April and is currently planned to run until 30 June.

Women's Help Centres

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women's help centres are in operation in the United Kingdom; and what percentage of their operating costs are funded by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Mellor: No figures are collected centrally on the numbers of refuges for battered women. However, the national voluntary organisation, Women's Aid Federation (England), estimates that there are some 256 refuges in the United Kingdom. None of these refuges receives central Government funding.

DEFENCE

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he has given permission for an increase in the number of F1-11 aircraft of the United States Government stationed at Upper Heyford;

(2) what requests he has received from the United States Government for the extension of facilities for F1-11 aircraft at Upper Heyford; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has had any discussions with the Secretary of Defense of the United States in relation to an increase in the number of F1-11 aircraft to be stationed at Upper Heyford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on 18 April 1989 to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

Dual-capable Artillery

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what number of dual-capable artillery pieces was held by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in 1986, 1987 and 1988; and what proportion in each year have been assigned a nuclear role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested can be found in figure 15 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-I), figure 16 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" (Cm. 101-I), and figure 19 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I).

Launchers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many launchers of each type the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation had in its nuclear systems (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of launchers for NATO's theatre nuclear forces have been given in successive Statements on the Defence Estimates.

Cyprus (Accommodation)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on accommodation for service personnel and their families in Cyprus and plans for its improvement.

Mr. Neubert: The standards of accommodation for service personnel and their families serving overseas are kept under regular review and a major study into both single and married accommodation is currently under way in Cyprus.

In the eastern sovereign base area a £3·5 million Army project of new build married quarters and single living accommodation, together with the upgrading of some existing single accommodation, was started in March 1988 and is due for completion in 1991. In the western sovereign base area a first phase of new build of 48 soldiers' married quarters began this year and will be completed in 1990 with further phases to follow. Extensive refurbishment of single accommodation is planned. At Akrotiri the RAF have a substantial refurbishment programme underway for both single and married accommodation and plans have been agreed for the construction of up to 100 airmen's married quarters over the next three years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following publicity campaigns are currently under way or will be undertaken during the periods shown:

(a) NATO 40th anniversary postal slogan in April 1989, which appeared on approximately 46 million items of mail.

(b) NATO briefing tour in April 1989, which will visit six major towns and cities in the United Kingdom.

(c) NATO exhibitions from April until late in 1989, which is an annual exhibition, but which will be enhanced this year to reflect the 40th anniversary of NATO, and will visit 15 venues throughout the United Kingdom.

Mental Illness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has as to the reasons for the disproportionate rate of mental illness among ethnic minorities

Mr. Freeman: None, but we are taking a close interest in research in this area which hopefully will suggest reasons for what seems to be a higher incidence of some forms of mental illness.

Pharmacists

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the amounts due to pharmacists in England and Wales for each year from 1978 to 1988 for the provision of pharmaceutical services; and what were the amounts paid and the profits earned for the same period.

Mr. Mellor: The amounts for England and Wales as shown in the balance sheets prepared with representatives of the profession are as follows; the basis of calculation change in 1985 from calendar years to financial years:

Year	£ million	£ million
Overpayment outstanding at beginning of 1978		8·0
1978	142·0	147·0

Information for 1988-89 is not yet available. No information is held on profits earned by pharmacists.

Private Hospitals

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will institute an inspectorate of private hospitals with the responsibility of inspecting hospitals in the private sector and of providing a report annually to him which evaluates the level of patient care;

(2) if he will order an immediate investigation into the allegations of patient abuse at the private hospital at London bridge;

(3) if he will discuss with the chairman of the relevant district health authority the conduct of experimental treatment at the London Bridge hospital and its effect upon patient care.

Mr. Mellor: Registration and inspection of private hospitals is the responsibility of district health authorities. The authority concerned has already initiated inquiries into the allegations and is continuing discussions with London Bridge hospital. The treatment to which the hon. Member refers in fact had ceased by the time the allegations were made.

Heart Disease

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted into how much vigorous exercise is required by the age groups (a) under 14 years, (b) 14 to 23 years, (c) 23 to 50 years and (d) 50-plus years in order to significantly reduce the threat of heart disease; and what measures are being taken to encourage people to achieve these levels.

Mr. Mellor: The appropriate amount of exercise to help reduce the threat of heart disease will vary not only according to age but also according to each individual's physical and medical condition. It is not possible to quantify the amount of exercise that would be beneficial simply by broad age bands. The Sports Council encourages participation in physical exercise and has published, jointly with the Health Education Authority, booklets on exercise which give "rule of thumb" guidelines on "testing" levels of fitness and measuring improvements in those who start to exercise regularly. These reflect the broad consensus of medical opinion that everyone would benefit from physical exercise and that 20 to 30 minutes exercise, on two or three occasions a week, is beneficial against coronary heart disease and brings many other benefits. I understand that the Sports Council hopes to carry out a national fitness survey in 1989-91.

AIDS

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding Health Service provision for AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: I have received three such representations. Two from the network of voluntary organisations in AIDS/HIV and one from the British Medical Association foundation for AIDS.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been made to his Department concerning the possible banning of unpasteurised green top milk; what would be the health repercussions of such a ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received a number of letters from members of the public about a possible ban on the sale of unpasteurised milk.

The proposed ban would reduce the risks to consumers of salmonella and campylobacter infections. Other infections will also be made less likely, for example, streptococcus zoepidemicus, which in 1984 caused the deaths of eight people who had been drinking untreated milk.

Nurse Grading

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many successful nurses' grading appeals have been heard to date;

(2) how many nurses' grading appeals have been heard to date.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses are currently fully qualified but have not yet received their PIN numbers.

Mr. Mellor: The issue of PIN numbers to qualified nurses, midwives and health visitors is a matter for the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Dame Audrey Emerton, DBE, chairman of the council if he is aware of any problems in this matter.

Radioactivity (Accidents)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities, which do not have designated medical physics departments for the purposes of his Department's circulars HC(89) and HN (FP) (89) 8 on arrangements for dealing with accidents involving radioactivity.

Mr. Mellor: The relevant circular requires regional health authorities to let the Department have details of designated medical physics departments by 31 July 1989. I shall write to the right hon. Member when this information has been received and collated.

Hospital Sites (Sales)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department lays down any guidelines to regional health authorities about the advertising for sale of hospital sites on which no closure decision or consultation has taken place.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for local management.

Rural GPs

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average list size of a general practitioner in rural practice in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The average list size of general practitioners in receipt of rural practice allowance (payable if 10 per cent. or more patients live in rural areas) in England at 1 October 1987 was 2,020. Figures for previous years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average general practitioner salary for doctors in rural practices in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information is not available.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the payments for child immunisation targets and cervical cytology targets for doctors in dispersed rural areas under the proposed general practitioner contracts.

Mr. Mellor: Our proposals for target payments to general practitioners who achieve the target levels of coverage for childhood immunisation and cervical cytology will apply equally to rural and non-rural doctors.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will define the concept of rurality to be used as a basis for providing supplementary capitation allowances under the proposed general practitioner contracts.

Mr. Mellor: We propose that a rural capitation supplement to basic practice allowance should be related to population density in future; areas of greatest sparsity attracting the highest level of supplement.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the level of estimated payments to be made to general practitioners in rural practices for health promotion work and under the proposed practitioner contracts;

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision for elderly patients in rural areas under the proposed general practitioner contracts.

Mr. Mellor: The proposals set out in "A New Contract" make clear that the provision of health promotion, including the offer of three-yearly check-ups, and annual check-ups for patients aged 75 and over, will be made specific requirements in general medical practitioners' terms of service. We intend to introduce a new sessional fee for health promotion clinics, and to raise significantly the level of the capitation fee for patients aged 75 and over. These proposals will apply equally to general practitioners in rural and non-rural areas. The amounts of these payments have not been decided.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of night fees which may be paid to doctors other than from the patient's own practice in sparsely populated rural areas.

Mr. Mellor: Under the Government's proposals a higher level of night visit fee will be payable if the visit is made by the patient's own doctor or by a partner or another member of the group practice. A lower fee will be payable if another doctor sees the patient. The same arrangements are proposed for both rural and urban areas. The amounts of the fees have not been decided.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or the Health Education Authority, respectively, or planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Mellor: There are no publicity campaigns being conducted by my Department or planned for the first three months of 1989-90 involving television advertising.

The following publicity campaigns are current or planned:

	Start	Finish
Nurse recruitment
Youth audience magazines	June only

In addition to the above the Department maintains information and awareness campaigns which run throughout the year which include the following:

National blood transfusion service—donor recruitment.

Organ donation—promotion of donor cards; awareness amongst National Health Service professional staff.

None of these publicity campaigns involve television advertising.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish his Department's response to the Griffiths report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 6 April at column 291.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the likely implications for the transmission of Channel 4 of public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s: Competition Choice and Quality".

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 17 March at column 383. I am not aware that the arrangements will be any different for Channel 4.

Family Practitioners

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the average number of hours per week spent by full-time family practitioner (a) National Health Service work and (b) other medical work on and the amounts earned in respect of each; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The survey of general medical practitioners' workload carried out in 1985-86 showed that the average GMP worked about 38 hours a week on general medical services duties. In addition a further 30 hours a week was spent on call during which time no duties were performed. Over and above his general medical services commitments the average GMP who undertakes non-general medical services work spent six hours a week on that work.

The review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration recommends the level of GMPs' income each year. In 1989-90 GMPs' average gross income will be £60,000. This figure reflects the review body's recommendation in respect of GMPs net income and indirectly reimbursed expenses which the Government have accepted in full, plus estimated directly reimbursed expenses. Information about the average amount earned on non-general medical services work by GMPs undertaking such work is not known.

Accountants

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified accountants are currently employed in the National Health Service and how many extra will be required by April 1991 to implement the Government's White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Information on the numbers of qualified accountants employed by health authorities is not routinely collected. The latest available information relates to 31 December 1987, when a survey showed that there were about 1,100 qualified accountants in post in England, Scotland and Wales. We will be working with health authorities to establish the need for additional qualified accountants to implement the proposals in "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555).

Health Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to introduce incentives for health authorities to invest money in health education.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Prevention of ill health and the promotion of good health is a Government priority. Health education is a key part of that, especially given the relationship between so many diseases and personal behaviour such as smoking, alcohol, sexual behaviour, diet and exercise. However, it is for health authorities to determine how the resources allocated to them are apportioned between all the services for which they are responsible, including health education. Authorities' work is monitored and health education has featured in ministerial reviews of English health authorities for the past two years. The importance the Government give to health education was reflected in the establishment of the Health Education Authority in 1987. One of the authority's functions is to plan and carry out work in co-operation with health authorities and act as a national centre of information and advice on health education. In addition the recommendation in the chief medical officer's report "Public Health in England" that directors of public health be appointed in each district and produce an annual report on the health of the population they serve is being implemented. The annual reports will be public documents and will draw attention to local health education issues, providing an additional incentive to action.

Factor 8

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what controls on imported factor 8 are being applied to the factor 8 currently being supplied in the United Kingdom on named product basis by the German-based company Octapharnna Gmbh; and what implications such controls have for the health of British haemophiliacs.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Factor 8 is being supplied by Octapharnna Gmbh for use in a clinical trial under the terms of the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trial) Order 1981 (SI 1981/164). This states that this product can only be used in accordance with the conditions of the trial and with the informed consent of the patient.

In addition, any physician, on his own responsibility, can order this factor 8 for use on a named patient basis.

The Department is satisfied that the blood meets the requirements of both EC and WHO guidelines and the requirements specified in the BP (Addendum 1386) monograph for factor 8.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teacher Training

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the Department of Education (NI) has introduced an annual bursary of £1,300 per annum for postgraduate teacher training courses in physis, chemistry and mathematics.

Dr. Mawhinney: In order to increase the supply of teachers in England and Wales trained to teach physics, chemistry, mathematics and craft, design and technology, a bursary scheme was introduced there in 1986 for all students studying for postgraduate certificates in education in these disciplines. This coincided with this year's relaxation of the embargo on awards to Northern Ireland students undertaking PGCE courses in Great Britain. There are no teacher shortages in Northern Ireland, but in the light of subsequent experience with the number and quality of applicants wishing to pursue these disciplines in local institutions, it became clear that there was a requirement for parity of incentive and it was therefore decided to introduce a parallel bursary scheme in Northern Ireland, thus ensuring the supply of appropriately trained teachers.

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for postgraduate certificate of education courses were received by Queen's university, Belfast, for courses commencing in 1986, 1987 and 1988; and how many of the places available were for teacher training courses in physics, chemistry and mathematics.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:—

Total applications for PGCE courses	672	640	625
Places available for teacher training courses in:
Physics	10	12	10
Chemistry	10	12	10
Mathematics	14	16	15

Young People

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 16 and 17-year-olds were in receipt of bridging allowance at the end of October 1988, November 1988, December 1988, January 1989, February 1989 and March 1989.

Mr. Viggers: It is estimated that the following numbers were in receipt of bridging allowance in each relevant month:

	Number
October 1988	914
November 1988	808
December 1988	807
January 1989	895
February 1989	458
March 1989	344

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 16 and 17-year-olds currently receive income support and bridging allowance.

Mr. Viggers: At the end of March 344 persons were receiving bridging allowance and there are currently three claimants receiving income support under the severe hardship provisions. No figures are available for those receiving income support under the normal rules.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 16 and 17-year-olds who previously received income support were transferred to bridging allowance after new benefit rules were introduced in September.

Mr. Viggers: A total of 986 young people were transferred to bridging allowance from income support.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will explain the methods being used to provide publicly available information on 16 and 17-year-olds who remain unemployed after the ending of the bridging allowance payments or extended child benefit.

Mr. Viggers: No such information is currently made available.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people of YTS eligible age, registered with jobcentres or the careers service were awaiting an offer of a YTS place at the end of October 1988, November 1988, December 1988, January 1989, February 1989 and March 1989; and of them, how many were receiving bridging allowance or extended child benefit or income support or a severe hardship grant from the social fund.

Mr. Viggers: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide figures for the number of young people no longer on bridging allowance who have not yet been allocated a YTS place.

Mr. Viggers: The number of young people no longer receiving bridging allowance who have not yet been allocated a YTP place is 140. Some of these young people have been submitted to YTP schemes and results are awaited.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that the terms and conditions of the employees of Harland and Wolff are protected when the undertaking is transferred to the privatised company.

Mr. Viggers: On 22 March 1989 I approved, on behalf of the Government, heads of agreement for the sale of H&W plc to a management-employee buy-out team, backed by Mr. Olsen. The terms and conditions of the employees of the privatised company will be a matter for the new owners.

Sectarian Funerals

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the present system of promulgation of information relating to the routing and timing of sectarian funerals; whether the cause of the failure to brief the late Corporals David Howes and Derek Wood in this respect, has been remedied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 12 April 1989]: These are operational matters for the general officer commanding and the Chief Constable.

EMPLOYMENT

Skill Shortages

82. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about Government measures to alleviate skill shortages in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Cope: There are a number of Government measures designed to alleviate skill shortages in all industries. These include the setting up of training and enterprise councils to enable employers to define and meet local skill needs. The Government is also helping young people and the unemployed to learn new skills through YTS, employment training and the recently announced business growth training.

Training Shortages

83. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent a lack of trained personnel is threatening the ability of United Kingdom industry to meet the surge in demand.

Mr. Cope: Previous figures cannot express completely the extent of the threat. The most recent quarterly survey of industrial trends, conducted in January 1989 by the Confederation of British Industry, reported that 25 per cent. of manufacturing firms in the United Kingdom anticipated that a shortage of skilled labour would limit output over the coming four months.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment further to his reply of 13 December 1988, Official Report, column 535, if he will make a further statement on the changes to calculation of the unemployment figures in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to my previous reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils (West Midlands)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils he expects to approve in the west midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I published a prospectus on 10 March inviting employers to form training and enterprise councils (TECs) in their local area. Response to TECs in the west midlands or elsewhere has been excellent. Groups of employers have been asked to apply for development funding. The deadline for first bids is 28 April. Decisions on the numbers of TECs will be taken when the bids are considered.

Business Growth Through Training

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of Business Growth Through Training.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched business growth training on 11 April 1989. The reaction that we have had from employers has been most encouraging. The Training Agency will be evaluating the impact of the new programme on business performance.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specialist inspectors have left the Health and Safety Executive in the last 12 months; and how many have been (a) retirements and (b) resignations.

Mr. Nicholls: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989, 17 specialist inspectors have left the Health and Safety Executive; of these, five retired, nine resigned and three transferred to other Government Departments.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many mines inspectors and quarries inspectors the Health and Safety Executive had in place on 1 April.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1989 the Health and Safety Executive employed 58 mines inspectors and 11 quarries inspectors.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the Health and Safety Executive's budget provision for the next three years.

Mr. Nicholls: Gross provision for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive in the three years from 1 April last is £118·3 million, £125·9 million and £133·5 million. The provision allows for real growth in the executive's activities in all three years, including an increase in the number of inspectors, and of inspections. Details will be published shortly in the commission's plan of work for 1989-90 and beyond.

Mining (Accidents)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of accidents that go unreported in the mining industry.

Mr. Nicholls: While under-reporting of accidents is significant in some industries, there is no evidence that it occurs to any marked degree in the mining industry.

Disabled People

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve access for disabled people to tourist attractions.

Mr. Lee: The English Tourist Board's advisory committee on visitor attractions has drawn up a voluntary code of practice for operators, which includes recomendations on access for disabled people. This code of practice is to be piloted in the west country in the near future, with the aim, following further consultations, of issuing the code in early 1990.

Co-operative Development Agency

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the future of the Co-operative development agency; and what has been his response.

Mr. Cope: I have received written representations from 14 organisations on the future of the Co-operative Development Agency. I have also received representations from a Co-operative parliamentary delegation.

All the representations are currently under consideration.

Film and Television Industries

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the report into the film and television industries by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has not been made publicly available.

Mr. Cope: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report entitled "Labour Practices in TV and Film Making" (Cm. 666) was laid before Parliament on 13 April. Copies are available to Members from the Vote Office and from HMSO bookshops.

YTS Allowance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the level of the 1983 YTS allowance would have been had it risen annually in line with (a) the retail price index, (b) average earnings and (c) the average yearly rate of inflation.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The YTS allowance was £25 per week in April 1983. If the allowance had been increased in line with changes in the retail price index it would have been £33·17 in February 1989. If adjusted in line with increases in the average earnings index, the allowance would have been £38·69 in January 1989. Adjusting the allowance for the rate of inflation is equivalent to the adjustment made for changes in the retail prices index. Many trainees receive more than the minimum level of the trainee allowance.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which items included in the 1988-89 estimated outturn columns of table 7.29 on page 25 of the public expenditure White Paper published in January were not included in the estimated total of £17·8 million on publicity spending by his Department given in the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 13 March, Official Report, column 56.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Since the public expenditure White Paper and my previous answer were published, later information has become available.

The latest estimated total for publicity expenditure for the Department of Employment in 1988-89 is £18·3 million. It includes expenditure for the employment service, but excludes that for the Training Agency, ACAS and the Health and Safety Executive.

The expenditure for the Training Agency, which was given in the reply to the hon. Member on 13 March 1989, Official Report, column 55, excludes expenditure for the skills training agency (shown as "Other TA publicity" in the PEWP table).

Job Clubs

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conclusions he draws from his Department's statistical information on whether assistance to the long-term unemployed is better provided by employment service jobcentres or private job clubs.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 April 1989]: At the end of February 1989, the job entry rate, or percentage of people leaving job clubs to go into jobs, was 56 per cent. for employment service job clubs against 52 per cent. from external job clubs. However the gap in performance is closing; at the end of March 1988 employment service job clubs had a job entry rate of 57 per cent. and external job clubs 50 per cent. In some employment service areas external job clubs are now performing as well as or better than their employment service counterparts. A number of initiatives, such as improved job club leader training, are in progress which should further improve performance.

External job clubs already provide valuable help to long term unemployed people and statistics suggest they are capable of performing broadly as well as those directly run by the employment service.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the destinations of job club participants since the start of the initiative to the most recent date, by year, for the north-west region and for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Details of the destinations of job club participants since the year to 31 March 1987 are given in the table. Comparable earlier statistics are not available.

Date	North West			Great Britain
	Number into jobs	Number into other positive outcomes	Per cent. into total positive outcomes	Number into jobs	Number into other positive outcomes	Per cent. into total positive outcomes

11 months to 27 February 1989	11,590	3,307	70	64,179	18,032	69

Note: Other positive outcomes include training, full-time education, self-employment, a place on community programme and now employment training.

Skill Centres

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training places are currently contracted within skill centres; and what guarantees he will obtain as to their future post-privatisation.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The number of employment training (ET) places currently contracted is 11,774. The skills training agency obtained these places in competition with other training providers, and private sector skill centres will be free to compete for ET places in the same way.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Cope: The table below gives the information requested in respect of women in the Employment Department group in the grades specified. Overall, 34,485 (66·6 per cent.) out of the group's 51,751 administrative staff are women.

Grade	Total staff in grade	Number of women in grade	Percentage women
G2	5	0	0·0

In common with the rest of the Civil Service, the Employment Department group has carried out surveys of the ethnic origin of its staff. The surveys were undertaken on the basis of voluntary self classification. Results for 1 April 1989 show:

Grade	Total respondents	Ethnic minority respondents	Percentage
Grades 1-6	469	3	0·6
Grade 7	1,088	9	0·8
All staff	54,077	2,501	4·6

A code of practice on the use of ethnic data exists to safeguard the confidentiality of individuals who have responded to the survey. For this reason we have not provided figures by individual grades for grades 1 to 6.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The first survey of ethnic origin of staff took place in 1986 and was undertaken on the basis of voluntary self classification. A further inquiry was sent to all staff for whom the information was not held in November 1988. As a result we now know the ethnic origin of 91·5 per cent. of Employment Department group staff. My Department is now considering whether further action is required.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Cope: Recruitment at grade 7 level and above is undertaken by the Civil Service Commission on behalf of my Department. Members of Employment Department group staff from ethnic minority backgrounds are participating in a series of newspaper advertisements being run by the commission to encourage more people from ethnic minorities to apply for professional posts. My Department is currently examining its effectiveness in selecting graduates with ethnic minority backgrounds, both externally and from our own staff for the "fast stream" schemes of management trainee and administration trainee/higher executive officer (development).

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new measures the Training Agency has undertaken in response to the report on racial inequality published in 1988 by the youth employment and training resource unit entitled "The Firms That Like to Say No".

Mr. Cope [holding answer 17 April 1989]: This report presents a selective and biased account of the representation of ethnic minority young people within YTS, and calls for no specific response. The Training Agency is, however, continuing its efforts to increase the proportion of ethnic minority trainees in employer-led YTS schemes. It is currently preparing improved marketing materials and new good-practice guidelines for managing agents. and is exploring with employer interests ways in which employers may improve and encourage access to training and employment opportunities for ethnic minority young people. A video is also in production to market YTS to ethnic minority young people.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details in for the nine standard economic regions, of the total numbers of entrants and leavers, excluding community programme transfers, to employment training by sex, ethnic origin and disability.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Information is only available for entrants for the eight Training Agency regions in England and for Scotland and Wales. The information for entrants to employment training to the end of February 1989 is given in table 1. The number of these entrants who have left employment training is currently only available for Great Britain as a whole and is estimated to be 50,000.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures for entrants for the Greater Manchester area are provided in the following table. Information for these entrants who have now left employment training will be available in the summer.

Legionnaires' Disease

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals exist within the Health and Safety Executive to review policy on Legionnaires' disease and air-conditioning systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 11 April 1989]: The Health and Safety Executive is currently undertaking a review of policy on this subject for the Health and Safety Commission. The commission will inform me of the outcome of this review as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Footpaths

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the subject of the Ramblers Association 1989 footpaths appeal; what measures he is planning to prevent footpaths being removed from definitive maps and to encourage local authorities to clear signposts and improve local paths; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations supporting the Ramblers Association's campaign to protect public footpaths. Successive Governments have recognised the importance of the rights of way network in providing access to the countryside for quiet enjoyment, and have given local authorities the duty of ensuring that such paths are recorded, maintained, and signposted where appropriate, and made available for public use. The Countryside Commission, through its "Enjoying the Countryside" initiative, has sought to encourage and assist local authorities to give appropriate priority to this work.

Footpaths can be removed from definitive maps only by means of the statutory procedures providing for the creation, diversion and extinguishment of public paths. The Government propose to amend these provisions, in the light of the Rubinstein judgment, to restore the power to correct mistakes on such maps, where there is evidence to show that a right to way, or its status, was recorded in error.

Recreational Facilities

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many acres of playing fields in (a) state schools and (b) private schools have been added in each of the last five years and how many have been lost to development; how many acres of private sports grounds have been added in each of the last 10 years and how many have been lost to development.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. As far as school playing fields are concerned, local education authorities are required to meet the minimal standards prescribed by the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. There have been some studies of private sports grounds which show that the position varies from area to area. While there has been a reduction in the number of grounds in industrial ownership there has been a substantial increase in both the quantity and quality of provision in the voluntary sector, for example, approximately 100 new artificial turf pitches have been provided in the last 10 years.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis recreational need is assessed or calculated for the purposes of public inquiries.

Mr. Moynihan: The body or individual making the planning decision, whether a local authority, a planning officer or the Secretary of State, should consider the merits of the case having regard to all the relevant provisions of the development plan. They should also give consideration to the regional recreation strategies prepared by the regional councils for sport and recreation.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the significant regional variations in the provision per head of population of urban recreational open space.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department recommends for the number of acres of playing fields per head of population; and what information he has on the figures recommended by (i) the National Playing Fields Association and (ii) the Sports Council.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department makes no recommendations about the average size of playing fields to be provided per head of the population. However, circular 33/70 encourages local planning authorities to consult with the appropriate sports council (now regional council for sport and recreation) on such matters. I understand that the regional councils for sport and recreation take into account the frequency of play and the days of peak demand in offering advice. The National Playing Fields Association recommends 6 acres per 1,000 people.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional areas of recreational open space would be available to the community if dual use became universal.

Mr. Moynihan: So far as I am aware, no assessment has been made of the additional areas of recreational open space which would be available as a result of universal dual use.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department recognises and assesses increase in latent demand for sporting provision in the light of Government supported campaigns for healthy lifestyles and increased sports participation.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council have a research programme which monitors and assesses the demand for sporting provision. The results of this research underpin the council's strategies as set out in its annual corporate plan and in its longer-term strategy documents.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is provided by his Department in the form of target figures for provision of outdoor recreation land within urban district boundaries.

Mr. Moynihan: Circular 33/70 sets out the Government's general policy on the provision of recreational facilities. It is for local authorities to decide specific target figures in consultation with local or regional sports councils and in the light of all material considerations. Circular 33/70 encourages local authorities to identify private open spaces in their development plan.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of what are the most popular forms of physical recreation (a) indoors and (b) outdoors, and of what is the stated and latent demand for facilities for these activities and the anticipated provision in the next five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The table shows, by sport, the percentage of all adults participating in each activity in a four-week period immediately prior to interview. The figures are taken from the general household survey (1986). (Figures are rounded up).

Information about the demand for facilities is not held centrally.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what percentage of urban recreation land lost to development has been replaced within the urban area; and what percentage has been replaced in the urban fringe.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. There have however been a number of local studies which suggest that, although the position varies from area to area, the overall provision of recreational land has remained fairly static.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many acres of municipally owned recreation grounds have been added in each of the last 10 years and how many have been lost to development.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many planning applications for development of recreational open space have been approved by (a) local planning authorities and (b) at appeal in the last 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about approvals given by local authorities is not held centrally. In the case of appeals, the Department does not keep records of decisions in a form which would enable me to provide the information requested.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which participation in sport and recreation is related to availability of facilities within walking distance for (a) car-owners and (b) non-car-owners.

Mr. Moynihan: Research carried out by the Sports Council show that on average 20 per cent. of those people using swimming pools and indoor sports centres travel more than five miles to reach the facilities. Thirty six per cent. travel less than one mile. Cars are the most popular mode of transport to sports facilities although there are variations from region to region. Fifty two per cent. of swimming pool users travel by car compared with 25 per cent. who walk. Studies of indoor sports centres show that 67 per cent. of users travel by car whilst only 8 per cent. walk.

Car ownership is one factor which determines the use of a facility. However other factors such as the size and management of the facility and the availability of competition are also important.

Sport

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken or commissioned by his Department to determine the extent to which people who take part in vigorous sport on a regular basis smoke less than average; and what measures are being taken to increase participation.

Mr. Moynihan: The general household survey shows that those people who participate in sport are slightly less likely to smoke than those who do not participate, whatever their age or income.

The measures being undertaken by the Sports Council to increase participation are described in the following publications:

The Sports Council Corporate Plan 1989-90;
The Sports Council Annual Report 1987-88;
A Strategy for Sport 1988-1993;
Sport in the Community, Into the '90's

Copies are available from the Sports Council.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the gap identified in the Wolfenden report between participation in sport before and after leaving school has been closed; whether he is now seeking an increase in post-school participation in the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council has identified that participation in sport falls sharply once young people have left school. Figures taken from the general household survey (1986) show that there has, over the last five years been an increase, in percentage terms, in the number of young people participating in indoor sports but a slight decrease in those participating in outdoor sports. The Sports Council has adopted a variety of policies and initiatives aimed at fostering increased participation among this age group.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what extent the Sports Council campaign to increase sporting participation amongst young people has been successful; and what are its present aspirations in this area.

Mr. Moynihan: The Sports Council has identified that participation in sport falls sharply once young people have left school. The council has adopted a variety of policies and initiatives, including the "Ever thought of Sport"? and "What's your Sport"? campaigns, aimed at reducing this trend.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are established by his Department for the purpose of public inquiries as to how protection of (a) so-called "green lungs" and (b) view by residents are to be assessed.

Mr. Moynihan: The body or individual making the planning decision, whether a local authority, a planning officer or the Secretary of State, should consider the merits of the case having regard to the relevant provisions of the development plan and all other material considerations.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department intends to issue a planning circular to replace circular 33/70.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department hopes to issue a planning policy guidance note covering sport and recreation towards the end of this year. The PPG will consolidate and update the existing planning guidance, including that given in circular 33/70.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that private landlords who collect the community charge from their tenants keep accurate records of payments made by each tenant; and how the money will be recovered if any such landlord fails to pay in these sums in full by the date of enforcement action for recovery taking place.

Mr. Gummer: Landlords will be responsible for collecting contributions towards the community charge only where a dwelling has been designated for the purposes of the collective community charge. There is a legal requirement on such landlords to keep records, and it is for charging authorities to ensure that the law is complied with. No recovery action for a collective community charge can be taken against a tenant, whose sole liability is to pay contributions to the landlord. Landlords who fail to pay the charge are subject to the same remedies as other charge-payers, and in addition, where a debt exceeds £1,000, a local authority may apply to the court for a charging order on the property.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce imprisonment as a penalty for non-payment of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: Imprisonment has always been available as a sanction of last resort where an individual refuses to pay rates, and where it is not possible to recover the outstanding amount through distraint. The remedies available to a charging authority for non-payment of a community charge have been widened to include, in addition to distraint, attachment of earnings and deductions from income support, to give people the opportunity to pay off arrears over time. If it proves impossible to recover the debt, a magistrates' court will be able to commit a person to prison but only if, having inquired into his means in his presence, the court are satisfied that his failure to pay was due to wilful refusal or culpable neglect.

Babbington Colliery Tip

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance his Department has given to reclaim the former Babbington colliery tip in Nottingham.

Mr. Chope: None. Responsibility for dealing with the tip rests with British Coal in accordance with the planning permission for tipping granted by Nottinghamshire county council.

AIDS

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage housing departments and associations to work on the issue of AIDS/HIV and housing; whether he intends to make resources available either through a special allocation or through the housing investment programme; and if he will support the recommendations of the local authority officers working group on AIDS and HIV report, "Housing and HIV Infection."

Mr. Trippier: My Department is considering jointly with the Department of Health the housing implications of AIDS/HIV infection, taking account of the working group's report and other information.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Ridley: The Civil Service Commission is responsible for recruitment of top grades to all Departments of the Civil Service. Recruitment is carried out on the principle of fair and open competition.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Ridley: The number of (a) women and (b) ethnic minorities in grades 1-7 employed in the Department of the Environment as at 3 April 1989 are:

(a) Percentage of officers who are women

[1] Non-respondents to surveys not included.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Department completed its voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff already in post in the autumn of 1987. This information is kept up to date on a continuous basis by asking job applicants to complete a questionnaire about their ethnic origin.

Water Rates

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase in water rates from 1 April by (a) water authorities and (b) statutory water companies.

Mr. Howard: I estimate that the average increase in all water charges is likely to be 9·8 per cent. for the water authorities and about 22 per cent. for the water companies. Information on the average rates levied on customers charged by rateable value is not yet available. I will publish the information requested in the Official Report as soon as practicable.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the average domestic water rate bill in (i) the current financial year and (ii) the financial year 10 years ago for (a) the Thames water authority region and (b) nationally; and if he will indicate the extent of the increase in real terms.

Mr. Howard: The average domestic water rate bill in 1979-80 for the Thames water authority region was £38·62, and for the whole of England, £41·47. Corresponding data for 1989-90 are not yet available.

Climatic Change

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Linlithgow may expect a substantive answer to his questions of 10 April relating to climatic change.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These questions were answered on 12 and 13 April at columns 586 and 667.

Housing Associations

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to bring forward the tenants' incentive scheme and other measures to assist housing association members to attain home ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 22 March at column 642.

Rate Precepts

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which three county councils have had the largest rate increase since 1981-82; and by how much they have increased.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

County councils with highest precept increases between 1981-82 and 1989-90

Rank and county council	Increase Percentage
1 Humberside	164·5
2 Derbyshire	160·8
3 Nottinghamshire	140·4

Rates

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total proposed rate in poundage and percentage terms for every local authority in England for 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is contained in a report "Rates and Expenditure of Local Authorities in England 1989-90" which has been placed in the Library.

Burtenshaw Farm, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the announcement by Barratts Housebuilders of an intention to build on land at Burtenshaw farm, Bolton, which was the subject of his decision to uphold a restrictive covenant on 23 November 1988.

Mr. Trippier: The enforcement of the covenant is a matter for Bolton borough council. I understand that the council is considering what action to take.

Rents

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the rent due, excluding rates, was collected by inner London boroughs in 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Leasebacks

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the effect of section 100 leasebacks on housing investment programmes.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the treatment of housing investment programme allocation for leaseback payments under section 100 of the Housing Act 1988 appear in paragraph 22 of the Department of the Environment circular: "Tenants' Choice": The Housing (Change of Landlord) Regulations 1989 and the Housing (Change of Landlord) (Prescribed Forms) Regulations 1989. The prescribed expenditure arising from leaseback will not present a drain on the authority's housing investment programme.

Housing Transfer (Gloucester)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what authority officers of his Department phoned Gloucester district council with consent for a proposed voluntary transfer; what was the legal status of that consent; and on what grounds the valuation of the sale was changed.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 4 April 1989 at column 153.

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the total amount and the average per tenant of (a) local authority subsidy for council housing, (b) central Government subsidy for council housing and (c) housing benefit payable in respect of council tenants in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland in 1978-79 and 1988-89 for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Parkinson Homes

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many privately owned Parkinson homes remain unrepaired.

Mr. Trippier: Of the 730 privately owned Parkinson houses identified by local authorities, three have been registered for repair under the PRC Homes Ltd. warranty scheme and 211 had been reported as repurchased up to 31 March 1987.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Ridley: A public information campaign on the community charge will take place in May and early June 1989. This will not involve television advertising.

Charitable Housing Associations

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he intends to give charitable housing associations on the circumstances in which they may acquire tenanted dwellings from local authorities and other public landlords.

Mr. Trippier: 1. Housing associations now have wider opportunities to acquire tenanted stock from public authorities in three ways:

- under the tenants' choice provisions of the Housing Act 1988,
- proposals by a number of local housing authorities to dispose of their dwelling stock,
- the forthcoming wind-up of the remaining new town development corporations in England.

The Department of the Environment and the Housing Corporation, in consultation with the Charity Commissioners, have prepared the following guidance for charitable housing associations with regard to the acquisition by them of tenanted housing stock.

2. The main objects of many charitable housing associations are on the following lines:

"to carry on for the benefit of the community the business of providing housing and any associated amenities for persons in necessitious circumstances upon terms appropriate to their means' and/or providing for aged persons in need thereof housing and any associated amenities specially designed or adapted to meet the disabilities and requirements of such persons".

3. This guidance relates to associations with main objects expressed in the terms set out in paragraph 2 or terms which do not depart substantially from them. However, in all cases, an association's purposes, objects and powers must be carefully considered by its governing body, if necessary seeking legal advice and advice from the commissioners, before the acquisition of tenanted stock is embarked upon. Moreover they must be construed as a whole, and a proposed acquisition must be consistent not only with the main objects and powers but also with any others there may be.

This guidance will refer to the various categories of qualifying needy or aged persons as "beneficiaries".

The purpose of the proposed acquisition

4. (i) In order to abide by the requirements both of its rules (or other governing instrument) and of general charity law, a charitable association may only purchase tenanted housing stock when it is satisfied that the acquisition will enable it to further its charitable objects and where the acquisition is capable of being regarded objectively in this way.

(ii) A charitable association is likely to have two main reasons for contemplating an acquisition of tenanted stock: to provide a better service for the existing tenants than the present, or in some circumstances some other alternative landlord; and to increase the association's ability to provide, in the longer term, for beneficiaries of the kinds specified in its objects as vacancies arise in the acquired stock. A purchase for these reasons is capable of being within the association's main objects, depending on the circumstances. If for some reason one of them does not apply in a particular case (for example if the association is not confident of being able to provide better or more efficient management for existing tenants) correspondingly greater weight would have to be attached to the other for the transaction to be comparable with the objects.

(iii) If the main reason for the acquisition of the tenanted stock is to provide vacant possession gradually over a long period the association may to that extent also be looking at the acquisition as an investment. Accordingly, it may be considered desirable for associations contemplating the acquisition of public sector housing to ensure that their constitution allows the acquisition and holding of land as an investment.

Factors to be considered by the association in assessing a proposed acquisition

5. In assessing the compatibility of a proposed acquisition with its objects, the association's governing body will need to consider the following factors in good faith and with open minds (although the list is not intended to be exhaustive):—

(i) how the acquisition fits in with the association's policy for fulfilling its objectives. The association must consider what the purchase is really likely to achieve for present and future beneficiaries, and whether it is an effective use of money and manpower which might otherwise be used elsewhere;

(ii) the proportion of non-beneficiaries to the existing tenants as a whole. This will be a major factor. It is impossible to lay down a maximum acceptable percentage, because circumstances will vary too much from case to case, but beneficiaries should normally be a substantial majority;

(iii) the extent to which the association may pick and choose particular dwellings within the portfolio on offer, and, conversely, the extent to which this might lead to difficult or inefficient management or other disadvantages to the beneficiaries. Where the portfolio on offer contains a substantial number of dwellings occupied by those who do not qualify as beneficiaries, the association may want to see if some or all of them can be excluded from the purchase. However, the vendor will not always be prepared to sell on this basis and there may in any event by management or social considerations which would make acquisition only of selected properties relatively disadvantageous to the beneficiaries;

(iv) the expected rate of turn-over of non-beneficiary tenants. The higher the proportion of non-beneficiary tenants, the more important this will be. But the rate of turnover of beneficiary tenants may also be important if one of the reasons for the purchase was to get long-term access to vacant housing stock.

(v) the opportunity to buy on advantageous terms. These transactions will normally take place not at unrestricted market value but at a lower "tenanted market value" assuming, among other things, that the dwellings will generally be kept available for letting and that rents will be kept down to levels within the reach of the lower paid.

The preserved right to buy and other rights of tenants

6. Existing tenants taken over from the public sector may have a preserved right to buy under section 171 A to 171 H of the Housing Act 1985 and section 127 of the Housing Act 1988. The association will need to take this factor into account, (and indeed the rights of or attributable to sitting tenants more generally, including security of tenure and a surviving spouse's right of succession) in considering how far the acquisition will enable it to provide for beneficiaries in the longer term (though these matters may of course be reflected in the purchase price). The right to buy might be disadvantageous if the association wanted a portfolio of properties as an integrated whole, to be kept intact as long-term housing stock for present and future beneficiaries, and the association would have to consider how far its plans might be undermined by some tenants exercising their right to buy. But the fact that existing tenants, beneficiaries or non-beneficiaries, will have statutory rights including the right to buy does not of itself make the purchase inconsistent with the association's charitable objects.

Bathing Water

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwich, South on 6 April, Official Report, column 281, concerning bathing water standards which are the responsibility of the Anglian water authority, what steps he proposes to require the authority to report on breaches of the European Economic Community guide and mandatory levels for pollutants which are not recorded in its report in the Library.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 April 1989]: I am satisfied that the Anglian water authority is correctly fulfilling its sampling and reporting requirements under the EEC bathing water directive.

Urban Programme (Stockton)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how much is being spent in the parliamentary constituency of Stockton, South under the urban programme; and on what schemes it is being spent.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 18 April 1989]: The current anticipated spend on the eight approved projects located in the Stockton, South constituency from the inner area programme of Middlesbrough and Stockton-on-Tees borough councils for the 1989-90 financial year is £258,400. One further scheme valued at £13,000 is subject to discussion between the Department and Stockton-on-Tees borough council. The schemes are listed below:—

Security/Environment Grants to Industry	52,500
Thornaby Impasse	4,200
Riverside Stockton Landscaping	500
Neighbourhood Worker, Thornaby	16,200
CEDEMP Mobility Centre Test Track	61,000
Neighbourhood Management and Community Resource Centre	42,000
Whinney Banks Site 6	62,000
	258,400

In addition, the Stockton, South constituency will benefit, directly or indirectly, from a number of boroughwide projects totalling £306,545. Again, this figure could increase by a further £50,300 depending upon the outcome of forthcoming discussions between the Department and Stockton-on-Tees borough council.

Water Charges

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average percentage increase in water charge for 1989-90 announced by the statutory water companies in England; and if he will list the percentage increase announced by each company in descending order of magnitude.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 April 1989]: I gave an estimate of the average increase in water company charges in my reply on March 14 to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel), Official Report, Vol. 149, column 211.

The detailed information requested by my right hon. Friend is not yet available. I will publish a list when returns now being received by the Department have been analysed.

Local Authorities (Businesses)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all local authorities which operate businesses themselves in competition with the private sector and the nature of each business concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 17 April 1989]: This information is not held centrally.

Development Decisions (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which London boroughs currently supply his Department with information about development decisions in London; which boroughs do not; and what steps he is taking to ensure that all boroughs supply the information necessary for his proposed development monitoring system in London.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 April 1989]: Enfield, Haringey, Lewisham, Sutton and Waltham Forest are the only London boroughs which do not regularly provide the Department with information about development decisions. Officials are in communication with those boroughs in an effort to encourage them to provide the information.

The Department has set up a pilot study with the London planning advisory committee into establishing a development monitoring system with the co-operation of all the boroughs.

Business Development (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he will use to decide whether London boroughs have made adequate provision in their unitary development plans for business development.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 April 1989]: The criteria used to judge whether adequate provision has been made will vary according to the individual circumstances and needs of the borough drawing up the UDP.

Local Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to restrict the access of local authorities to private financial markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 April 1989]: Clause 34 of the Local Government and Housing Bill provides that, where local authorities are authorised to borrow money, they will be able to do so by borrowing from authorised banking institutions, from the National Debt Commissioners or the Public Works Loan Commissioners, from the private sector by means of loan instruments as defined in subsection 34(4), or, with the consent of my right hon. Friend, by other means. It would be for the authorities to decide which of these means to use.

Written Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Gibraltar (Incident)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the Spanish Government informed the British authorities that the Renault car parked at Main street, Gibraltar, on 6 March 1988, was followed by surveillance officers of the Spanish authorities to the frontier of Gibraltar on 6 March; and if it was then followed by British authorities until it was parked;

(2) whether the Spanish authorities have confirmed to him the statements of Tomaz Rayo Valenzuela and Manuel Gimenez that the Spanish police discovered D. McCann and S. Savage staying at the hotel Escandinavia, Torremolinos, on 5 March 1988 and informed the British authorities;

(3) why the Spanish police were requested not to follow D. McCann and S. Savage on 6 March 1988.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the statement given by my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Trefgarne in another place on 1 March at column 1124.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Payments (Interest)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Inland Revenue charge a higher interest rate on moneys owed to it by taxpayers than the rate that it applies to moneys repaid by it to taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The present rates of interest charged by the Inland Revenue on unpaid tax and paid on overpaid tax are the same (11·5 per cent.).

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to (a) the number of employers involved in, and (b) the total annual cost to the Exchequer of, the current take-up of relief available for the establishment of workplace nurseries by employers, under (i) the 4 per cent. per annum relief scheme and (ii) the special provision for enterprise zones.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

P11D Form (Limit)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to raise the limit for the P11D form and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are no plans to do so.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the limit for the P11D form was raised to £8,500; and what would be the equivalent figure in current monetary terms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Employees whose earnings, including the value of benefits, are at a rate of £8,500 or more per year are liable to tax on benefits in kind. All directors are liable regardless of the level of earnings. The earnings threshold—also known as the P11D limit—was set at £8,500 in 1979-80 and, if it had been indexed in line with inflation according to the statutory formula for increasing personal allowances and thresholds, the threshold in 1989-90 would be £18,100.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards indexing the limit for the P11D form in line with inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government have at no time sought to increase the threshold at which employees pay tax on benefits in kind, since in principle all employees should pay income tax on the whole of their earnings whether received in cash or in kind.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employers currently receive dispensation from the Inland Revenue from completing the P11D form; and how many employees benefit from such dispensations.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that, at December 1988, about 23,000 employers had dispensations from reporting employees' expenses payments on forms P11D, an increase of 29 per cent. on the number at October 1987. When a dispensation exists in relation to expenses payments P11Ds may still need to be completed in relation to benefits in kind.

The number of employees covered by dispensations in 1985-86 is estimated to be about 2·7 million. Figures for later years are not yet available but, as there has been a substantial increase in employers receiving dispensations, it is estimated that over 3 million employees are now covered by them.

Student Covenants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received, since 15 March 1988, about the withdrawal of tax relief on increases in parental contributions to covenants for students; whether he plans any changes in these arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Treasury Ministers have received some 200 representations about various aspects of the changes introduced last year to the tax treatment of student covenants. No separate record has been kept of those which relate to increases in parental contributions for students.

We have no plans to make any further changes in the tax treatment of student covenants. The changes which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor introduced last year greatly simplify an unnecessarily complex part of the tax system.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to reform or abolish stamp duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer, 19 April 1989]: In my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's recent Budget he proposed both to abolish stamp duty on life policies and to adapt the charge on share transfers to forthcoming developments in methods of share dealing.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the money taken by the purchase of premium bonds is spent on (a) administration and (b) prize money.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply 7 March 1989 c. 493]: I regret that there was an error in the reply. Premium bond prize money is a charge on the National Loans Fund not the Consolidated Fund.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Attorney-General what steps the Lord Chancellor is taking to reduce the risk of mortgage fraud arising from delays in the Land Registry; what is the current backlog; what is his target for the interval between receipt and completion of inquiries; when he expects this to be achieved; and how long he plans to maintain that performance once achieved.

The Attorney-General: There does not appear to be any evidence that mortgage fraud occurs because of delays in completing applications at the Land Registry. Such frauds occur in areas of the conveyancing process with which the Land Registry is not directly involved.

The Land Registry has target completion times of 14 weeks for first registrations, 12 weeks for dealings with part of the land in a title and four weeks for dealings with the whole title. The present backlog of applications which have not been dealt with within these target completion times is 586,000.

The targets referred to will be achieved within the next year if activity levels in the property and financial markets do not increase. Once they are achieved the chief land registrar will look to improve the service further.

Magistrates (Advisory Committees)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General on what criteria the Lord Chancellor chose 1992 as the date by which local advisory committees on appointing magistrates should make their membership publicly known.

The Attorney-General: Advisory committees are reconstituted every three years. By the end of 1992 any serving members who do not wish their names to be disclosed will have had an opportunity to retire.

ENERGY

Power Stations (Applications)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy not to consider future applications for power stations until after negotiations with affected local authorities have taken place.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Present legislation provides for the relevant planning authorities to be consulted about such applications when they are made. Similar provision is made in the Electricity Bill currently before Parliament.

Furthermore, I understand that it is normal practice for an applicant to discuss a proposed development informally with the planning authorities before submitting his application to my right hon. Friend.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department owns no such properties.

Plutonium

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill of 9 December, Official Report, column 373, he will state the error limits allowed in calculating the amount of plutonium produced by British civil nuclear power stations in the year ended 31 March 1988;

(2) what criteria his Department uses in allowing error limits to be set for the calculations of the amount of plutonium generated by British civil nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department does not set specific error limits in the calculation of plutonium content, but expects the operators to achieve the highest possible accuracy in their estimates.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the population figures within a 100-mile radius for each nuclear power station in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Most of the population of the United Kingdom live within a 100-mile radius of a nuclear power station.

NORTHERN IRELAND

EC Funding

10. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on additionality with respect to European Community funding as it applies to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We shall adhere to the additionality conditions included in the new regulation co-ordinating the EC's three structural funds.

Student Loans

12. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the number of representations he has received for and against the Government's students loan plan.

Dr. Mawhinney: Representations expressing a variety of views have been received from four Members of Parliament, two district councils, the Fair Employment Agency, local representatives of the National Union of Students and other student bodies.

13. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he had received any representations from banking institutions in the last month with regard to the proposed introduction of student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Devolved Government

14. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is taking action to secure devolved government in Northern Ireland, either within or outside the framework of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: We are exploring the possibilities for political movement. I would not at this stage try to draw any conclusions from these exploratory discussions, which are still in progress, though all the main political parties have said they support devolution. I hope that responsible political leaders and interested groups will take this opportunity to convey their views on these important matters and they can do it either within or outside the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Security

15. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the security situation.

23. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the security position in Northern Ireland.

22. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Since 9 March, 10 people have died in incidents arising from the security situation. These deaths included two senior police officers, one UDR soldier and seven civilians. They also included the murder of a young girl killed by a bomb planted by the Provisional IRA without warning in Warrenpoint on 12 April. Thirty people were also injured in this appalling attack. The Provisional IRA claimed responsibility for five of these murders, whilst Loyalist paramilitary organisations are believed to have been responsible for the other five.

The resolute efforts of the security forces have resulted in 74 people being charged with serious offences, including 12 with murder and 13 with attempted murder since the beginning of the year. A total of 123 weapons, over 14,500 rounds of ammunition and 215 lb of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland. I understand that the Garda Siochana has recovered 39 weapons, 11,500 rounds of ammunition, and 230 lb of explosives.

Education and Library Boards

16. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives from the education and library boards in Northern Ireland; and what was discussed.

Dr. Mawhinney: I met a deputation from the Association of Education and Library Boards on 21 March 1989 when resolutions adopted at the association's 1988 annual meeting were presented and discussed.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

17. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the review of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the review of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: Work is continuing on the review under article 11 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement of the working of the intergovernmental conference. It is intended that the review be concluded, and the results made public, at the next meeting of the conference to be held in a few weeks.

Touring Arts Companies

18. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to encourage the exchange of touring arts companies between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: There has been, and continues to be, a healthy exchange of touring arts companies between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom. The Government, however, are not directly involved in these arrangements. In Northern Ireland, as in the rest of the United Kingdom, the support of artistic ventures is the responsibility of the Arts Council and the council and the arts organisations themselves encourage and arrange tours by individual artists and companies to and from Northern Ireland.

Prisoners (Release)

19. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the system for fixing release dates for prisoners serving sentences of indeterminate length.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton).

Republic of Ireland

20. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next proposes to have discussions with Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and what matters he will discuss.

Mr. Tom King: I last met Irish Ministers on 5 April. No firm date has yet been announced for the next meeting of the conference, but I expect this to be done quite soon.

Taoiseach

21. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I last met the Taoiseach in Dublin on 13 September prior to the intergovernmental conference on that day. The subjects discussed are confidential. I meet the deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Lenihan, regularly in the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Community Policing (North Down)

24. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide more funds to the Royal Ulster Constabulary to enable community policing in the North Down area to be fully restored.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Police Authority grant for 1989-90 is £415 million. This represents an increase of some £30 million over the previous year. It is primarily the responsibility of the Chief Constable and the Police Authority to determine priorities and allocate resources.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives from the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland; and what was discussed.

Mr. Needham: I met board representatives on 23 March. We discussed the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Slaughtering and Meat Trading

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to introduce legislation to bring Northern Ireland into line with Great Britain regarding illegal slaughtering and unfit meat trading.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland legislation on the slaughter of animals is already in line with Great Britain. Legislation governing trade in unfit meat is in line with England and Wales, but differs from Scotland. The Department of Health and Social Services is currently considering whether the Northern Ireland law on unfit meat should be improved by including some provisions equivalent to those applying in Scotland.

Live Fish (Transport)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the exact procedure used and documentation required to transport live fish in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The movement of live fish, ova and fry requires a permit issued under section 14 of the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966. Permits may be obtained by making application to fisheries division, Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, Castle buildings, Stormont, Belfast.

Terrorism

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were arrested, detained and subsequently released without charge under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism Act in each of the years from 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information is as follows:

Persons detained under Section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Persons Arrested/ Detained	908	938	1,309	1,459	1,717
Persons released without charge	650	691	951	[1]1,116	[1]1,344

[1] Includes one person not charged with an offence but excluded under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Medical and Nursing Profession

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives from the medical and nursing profession in Northern Ireland; and what was discussed.

Mr. Needham: I have discussed "Working for Patients" with a variety of interests including representatives of the medical, nursing and management professions and members of health and social services boards and I will be meeting several more delegations shortly.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the use of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Plastic baton rounds are used by the security forces in Northern Ireland only when their use is judged to be the minimum and reasonable amount of force necessary to protect life, property and to prevent serious crime. In certain circumstances, particularly during vicious and widespread rioting when lives are put seriously at risk, the use of plastic baton rounds is the most effective way of restoring order. This method of riot control is designed to ensure that the risk of injury or death is kept to a minimum.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to discuss the question of state subsidies with representatives of Harland and Wolff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans to discuss the question of state subsidies with representatives of Harland and Wolff. I can confirm, however, that following the signing of the heads of agreement discussions between my officials and the MEBO/Olsen team are continuing.

Comptroller and Auditor-General

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made to appoint a new Comptroller and Auditor-General for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: Her Majesty the Queen has graciously approved the appointment of Dr. W. H. Jack CB, former permanent secretary at the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, to this office in succession to L.V.D. Calvert CB who is retiring.

Young People

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider reintroducing income support to 16 and 17-year-olds who do not receive an offer of a YTS place at the termination of their period of bridging allowance or extended child benefit.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1989]: In line with the policy of maintaining parity in social security provision, the rules for paying income support to 16 and 17-year-olds in Northern Ireland are kept in line with those for the rest of the United Kingdom. At present income support is payable under the normal rules to a number of 16 and 17-year-olds, for example, if they are incapable of work or have a child. Claims for income support under the "severe hardship" provision will be considered from any 16 or 17-year-old who is actively pursuing a place in the youth training programme.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 16 and 17-year-olds who remain unemployed after the ending of the bridging allowance payments or extended child benefit (1) applied for severe hardship grants from the social fund or (2) received severe hardship grants from the social fund for each month, October 1988 to March 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 April 1989]: Severe hardship payments are made under the income support scheme rather than the social fund and the available information is set out in the table below:

Income support severe hardship applications

	Applications received	Admitted for payment
October 1988	2	2
November 1988	3	2
December 1988	7	5
January 1989	5	5
February 1989	7	6
March 1989	13	11

EMPLOYMENT

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will assess the likely implications of the transmission by Channel 4 of public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s: Competition, Choice and Quality".

Mr. Cope: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by Channel 4.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Cope: The Employment Department group has title, either freehold or leasehold, to 36 residential properties. Of these, one flat in Morden, Surrey has been vacant for more than a year, while major repairs and refurbishment works are carried out. Two houses associated with Letchworth skillcentre, and intended for keyworker staff, have been unoccupied since December 1988.

Sky Television (Work Permits)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department received applications for work permits from Mr. Pat Mastandrea amd Mr. Gary Davey of Sky Television; if the applications were successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Details of work permit applications are confidential between this Department and the applicant's employer or his accredited representative.

Foreigners (Employment)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria have to be satisfied before a non-EC national can obtain employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: Work permits are issued in respect of a specific post. In general work permits for normal employment are granted only in respect of jobs requiring professional qualifications or administrative, executive or high technical skills for which suitable resident labour is not available. The pay and conditions offered should be at least as good as those offered in the area for similar work and the overseas worker should normally be aged between 23 and 54 years.

Workfare

92. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the subject of workfare schemes.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 18 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend receives, from time to time, representations both for and against the introduction of a workfare scheme in this country.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for his Department and the Training Agency, respectively, or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 19 April 1989]: The current publicity campaigns and those planned by my Department for the first three months of 1989-90 are as follows:

Employment Department Group Publicity Campaigns

The Training Agency	Start Date	Finish Date

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present aid projects funded by his Department in the west bank and the Gaza strip; what have been the projects so aided in each of the preceding five years; and what has been the cost of each.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over the past five years the Overseas Development Administration's bilateral assistance to the west bank and Gaza has been provided through contributions to projects undertaken by British non-governmental organisations; by training awards for Palestinians to study in Britain; and by book presentations to educational institutions. The United Kingdom also provides support through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees. In each year from 1984 to 1987 £5 million was contributed directly, increasing to £5·2 million in 1988. £5·5 million is being provided in 1989.

The United Kingdom contributes to the European Community programme for the west bank and Gaza. In 1987 and 1988 about £0·4 million a year was attributable to the United Kingdom. Of the Community's contribution to UNRWA about £3 million in each of the two years was attributable to the United Kingdom.

WALES

Agricultural Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farms in Wales were visited by his staff and advised about methods of controlling agricultural pollution in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on the number of farms visited to provide advice on pollution control is not available. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service takes every opportunity to discuss pollution control measures in the course of farm visits made for other purposes, and provides advice free.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights in Wales; and which organisations made these representations.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available. The question of human rights can be interpreted as covering an extremely wide range of issues for which my Department is responsible. Some representations received from both organisations and individuals, may raise allegations of denials of human rights. No central record is kept of such representations or of the organisations making them.

Teachers' Salaries

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how teacher salary costs are calculated in Wales for the local management formula for primary schools in the calculation of school budgets.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under local management of schools primary schools budgets will be determined by a formula based largely on age-weighted pupil numbers. At least 75 per cent. of the resources so distributed must be in proportion to age-weighted pupil numbers. In deciding how heavily to weight each age of pupils, LEAs will need to make assumptions about teaching costs for each age group. These assumptions will be based on average teacher salaries. However, Welsh Office circular 36/88 recognises that in the case of small schools there may be variations between the actual teaching costs and the LEA's average costs, due to teachers' position on the main scale and the incidence of salary safeguarding. LEAs may therefore adjust schools' budgets to reflect this factor. In general, however, the degree of protection should be tapered according to the size of school, so that budget shares of larger schools are not adjusted.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

	(a) Women		(b) Members of ethnic minorities
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Grade 2	—	—	—	—
Grade 3	—	—	—	—

Grade 5	5½	10·0	—	—
Grade 6	17½	19·0	1	1·0
Grade 7	13	9·5	1	0·7
Department total	987	46·0	20	0·9

Notes:
1. As at 1 January 1989.
2. The grade categories shown include equivalent professional grades.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department carried out a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees in May 1988. The ethnic origin of all new entrants is known and I have no present plans for another survey.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department is an equal opportunity employer. It gives equal consideration, regardless of colour, race, ethnic or national origins, to all candidates in its promotion and recruitment procedures. This applies to all levels of management.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were (a) working in local government in Wales, and (b) working in the different occupational categories in local government in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is published in table 47 of "Welsh Local Governmental Financial Statistics No. 12, 1988", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Water Industry Staff

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working in the water industry in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Grist: The number of people working in the water industry in Wales is not available in the exact form requested. Figures are available for the Welsh water authority's area of supply and those people employed by the Wrexham and East Denbighshire water company and the Chester water company. These are detailed in the following table:

Manpower (Full-time equivalent employees as at 31 March 1988)

	Welsh water authority	Wrexham and East Denbighshire	Chester Waterworks Company
1979	5,594	150	89
1985	4,709	131	85
1986	4,746	121	84
1987	4,845	119	80
1988	4,618	113	78

Education (Staff)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working (a) in education and (b) the different occupational categories in education in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information for the maintained sector is given in "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics, No. 12, 1988" (table 47) copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Directly comparable figures for the independent sector are not available.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working (a) in the Welsh Office, and (b) in the different occupational categories in the Welsh Office in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of permanent staff working in my Department in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year and their occupational categories are set out in the following table. Direct comparisons between individual occupational categories after 1986 are however not possible since in following years they were affected by changes arising from the introduction of unified grading and the expansion of the open structure.

Year	Senior open structure	Administration and clerical	Professional grades	Support grades	Industrial grades	Total
1979	17	1,596·0	345·5	472·5	168·0	2,599

Baglan Road

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the design load of that part of the road from Baglan to the point of the road over the bridge at the roundabout for Swansea or Carmarthen; and whether it has been exceeded in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The existing road is heavily loaded, but no single traffic-capacity figure is available since that depends on many factors, especially junctions. Delays tend to occur particularly at peak periods at Baglan roundabout, but work will start shortly on a scheme to alleviate this. Further relief will be achieved with the completion of the final section of the M4 in 1994.

Bathing Water

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sewerage outfalls from Wales into the Bristol channel, together with industrial discharges; and whether he has made any assessment of how many more outlets can be allowed before the water quality off south Wales and north Devon would require the European Community to take legal action over the failure of many beaches to meet European Community bathing water standards.

Mr. Grist: Sewerage outfalls from Wales direct to the Bristol channel are listed in the following table. Information on industrial discharges, which are the responsibility of the Welsh water authority, is not centrally available.

Cardiff Western	Baglan
Barry East New	Mumbles Head
Barry West Town	Bishopston
Rhoose East	Southgate
Rhoose West	Oxwich
West Aberthaw	Overton
Llantwit Major	Rhossili
Penybont	Saundersfoot
Newton Point	Tenby
Irongate	Manorbier
Afan	Stackpole

No such assessment as suggested by my hon. Friend is needed. I refer him to my reply of 10 April at column 382.

Red Kites

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many red kites have been found dead in mid-Wales during each of the past three years; what has been the cause of death in each case; and how many prosecutions for the use of illegal poison have been taken out in the same period.

Mr. Grist: The Department is involved only if red kites are suspected of dying from pesticide poisoning. In 1986, there were three such incidents in mid-Wales, each involving one red kite. In one case the cause of death was not established. In the other two cases the insecticide Fenthion was indentified as the cause of death and although circumstances suggested its illegal use as a poison, this could not be cofirmed. There were no cases recorded in 1987 or 1988. So far this year there have been two incidents involving two and four birds respectively and these cases are still under investigation. There have been no prosecutions in Wales for illegal poisoning of red kites since the beginning of 1986.

Post-Chernobyl Restrictions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of farms, number of sheep and number of acres subject of post-Chernobyl restrictions as at February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Approximately 416 holdings, 300,000 sheep and 210,000 acres. Restrictions will be lifted as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising food safety.

Housing

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list (a) the number of dwellings owned, (b) the number of dwellings built, (c) the number of dwellings sold and (d) the number of dwellings purchased from the private sector, in each year since 1980 by each housing authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 11 April 1989]: The information requested is given in the following tables:

SCOTLAND

Vehicle Lessees (Protection)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will seek to introduce legislation giving protection to lessees of motor vehicles in Scotland similar to that provided for lessees in England under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1983.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The Law Commission and Scottish Law Commission recommended in their report on the sale and supply of goods (Law Com. No. 160, Scot. Law Com. No. 104, Cm. 137) that the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 be extended to Scotland. This would give statutory protection to lessees of motor vehicles in Scotland, particularly in respect of implied terms as to quality and fitness for purpose. The Government have announced their support for the Law Commission's recommendations and the intention to legislate at an appropriate opportunity.

Waste Disposal at Sea

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those operations for which sea disposal licences for the deposit or incineration of waste at sea have been granted under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of licences issued by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 is as follows:—

	1986	1987	1988
Liquid Industrial Waste	0	0	0
Solid Industrial Waste	2	1	3
Sewage Sludge	2	2	2
Dredged Spoil	24	32	25

All licences are issued on an annual basis. Details of licences issued are maintained by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on a public register.

Internal Market

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the total value to the latest available full year of public sector contracts in Scotland of a character which will make them open to Communitywide bidding as part of the creation of the internal market.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No assessment has been made because information is not held centrally on Scottish public sector contracts. The cost of establishing a means of assessing the value of public contracts in Scotland to be opened to Communitywide bidding would not be justified.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the reasons why the sale of the electoral register is allowed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Representation of the People (Scotland) Regulations 1986 provide for the publication and supply of the electoral register, including the sale of copies at a prescribed fee. These provisions reflect the fact that the electoral register is a public document which requires to be widely circulated for electoral purposes; and the conclusion that its use by commercial organisations could not effectively be prevented, but that a charge for such use should be made.

Eggs

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that eggs imported into Scotland will have been subjected to equally rigorous egg production and hygiene regulations as eggs produced in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 4 April to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies). Eggs are not normally imported directly into Scotland from other EC member states.

Fire Prevention (Cigarettes)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his response to the suggestion by the chief inspector of fire services for Scotland that the production of fire-proof cigarettes should be considered as an aid to reducing household fires.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I noted the comments made by Her Majesty's chief inspector of fire services for Scotland in his 1987 annual report on the research that was carried out in the United States on safer cigarettes. That research took the form of a technical study which is the subject of further research.

I welcome appropriate steps that can be taken to reduce the loss of life through fire in the home. At present my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, whose Department takes the lead in this area of consumer safety, is monitoring further research on the American technical study. I propose to review the matter when the results of this further research are available, probably in 1990.

Post-Chernobyl Restrictions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of farms, number of sheep and number of acres subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions as at February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 69 farms, some 64,000 sheep and about 66,000 acres were subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions in February.

Bute House

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what liability for poll tax exists in respect of his official residence at Bute house in Edinburgh.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Leith (Mr. Brown) on 5 April 1989.

Preparatory Schools

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the names of the preparatory schools to be included in the assisted places scheme in the 1989-90 session and the amount of fee remission grant to be allocated to them.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have decided to admit 16 preparatory schools to the scheme in the 1989-90 school session and details including the fee remission grant are shown in the table. The inclusion of these schools in the scheme widens significantly the type of school available to less well-off families who could not have previously contemplated sending their children to such schools.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any items have been accepted in lieu of tax since he last made an announcement to Parliament.

Mr. Rifkind: Further to my statement of 11 May 1988 at column 128 I am pleased to announce that the following items have been accepted in lieu of tax:

Item	Amount of tax satisfied £
Two Marble Busts by Louis Francois Roubiliac	353,855
Two Portraits by Angelica Kauffmann	34,100
Painting by El Greco, known as "Fabula".	947,136·68

The Roubiliac busts have been formally allocated to the national museums of Scotland but will remain on public display in situ at Mellerstain house in Berwickshire. In accordance with the conditions upon which the other items were offered, the Kauffmann portraits and the El Greco "Fabula" have been allocated to the national galleries of Scotland. The acceptance of the El Greco, which was made possible by a call on the reserve in accordance with the arrangements agreed in July 1985, followed the precedent set by the acceptance of Picasso's "Weeping Woman" in that the national galleries of Scotland agreed to pay the owner the difference (£1,152,861) between the tax liability to be satisfied and the "special price" of £2·1 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Charles Powell and Mr. Bernard Ingham

Q100. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will transfer Mr. Charles Powell and Mr. Bernard Ingham to other posts in the Civil Service; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Petrol Prices

Q165. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received regarding the increases in petrol prices.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware I have not received any recent representations on increases in petrol prices. However, since the Budget the price difference between unleaded and leaded petrol has widened to reflect the enhanced tax advantage for unleaded introduced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Cynon Valley

Q187. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to visit Cynon Valley.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

President Gorbachev (Visit)

Q210. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received following the visit of President Gorbachev.

Q220. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received following the visit of President Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: The visit of President Gorbachev has been widely and warmly received.

Engagements

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 April.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Mr. Charles Powell

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current grade of Mr. Charles Powell; and what is the salary attached to that grade.

The Prime Minister: The current grade of Mr. Charles Powell is grade 3 which has a salary range, inclusive of discretionary points and London allowance, of £39,600-£49,600 per annum.

Economic Policy

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister whether all speeches made by Cabinet Ministers during the course of the last four weeks on general economic policy represented Government policy.

The Prime Minister: Cabinet Ministers have collective responsibility for Government policy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Forth: My Department has no empty properties suitable for residential accommodation.

Fireworks (Injuries)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the figures of injuries caused by fireworks in 1988.

Mr. Forth: According to reports from hospitals in England, Scotland and Wales, 877 people required treatment for injuries caused by fireworks during the three weeks leading up to 5 November 1988 and the few days after. This is 83 fewer than in 1987.

I am encouraged by these figures, which show a fall on last year, particularly as they show a significant 18 per cent. reduction in the number of street injuries and to children under 16.

Our safety campaigns last year highlighted the penalties facing shopkeepers who sell fireworks to children under 16 and individuals who let off fireworks in the street. I am pleased to see that the greatest reductions in injuries have been in the prime target groups of our campaigns, but we shall continue to seek greater safety all round.

We shall discuss with trading standards officers and industry how we can further improve standards of fireworks, particularly imports, and ways of testing their safety. The table sets out the figures of firework injuries in Great Britain over a four-week period in October/November 1988.

Blue Arrow

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to appoint inspectors under section 432 of the Companies Act to investigate Blue Arrow and the Peter de Savary deal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I am considering the available information to see whether there is any action my Department need take.

Visual Display Units

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) by how much United Kingdom manufacturers' percentage share of the visual display unit market has fallen since 1986; what assessment he has made of the reasons for this fall; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking to arrest the continuing decline of United Kingdom manufacturers' percentage share of the visual display unit market.

Mr. Forth: United Kingdom manufacturers' sales, as a percentage of the United Kingdom market for visual display units, fell from 64 per cent. in 1986 to 47 per cent. in the first nine months of 1988. The figures do not include VDUs that are manufactured and incorporated on site into complete systems, such as personal computers.

Since early 1987 IBM United Kingdom has manufactured a high proportion of its own VDUs at its British PC plant, and the fact that these are not included in the published VDU statistics is a significant factor in explaining the apparent decline.

Decisions about sourcing policy are a matter for the commercial judgment of individual businesses. The Government's responsibility is to create the right economic climate and to encourage enterprise. My Department has available a wide range of assistance to companies under the enterprise initiative.

Opium Derivatives

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of opium derivatives is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission found that a company with around 87 per cent. of the market in the supply of specified opium derivatives has exploited this monopoly situation by engaging in price discrimination and has been enabled to charge high prices in the domestic market, leading to very high levels of profit. The commission concluded that these practices were against the public interest.

The commission established that Macfarlan Smith Ltd, a subsidiary of Glaxo plc, had around 87 per cent. of the market in the supply of morphine, codeine, dihydrocodeine, diamorphine, ethylmorphine and pholcodine and was therefore a scale monopolist as defined in the Fair Trading Act 1973. The only other manufacturer is the Boots Company plc, which produced codeine and small amounts of morphine, principally for use in-house.

Opium derivatives are subject to domestic and international controls under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and the United Nations single convention on narcotic drugs 1961 and any person wishing to manufacture or process these products in the United Kingdom, or to import them, requires a Home Office licence. There are no imports of opium derivatives into the United Kingdom because it has been Home Office policy for many years not to issue import licences.

The commission stated in its report that to increase competition in this market was of prime importance. It recommended that the Home Office, in conjunction with other Government Departments, should work towards the creation of a single EC market in the reference products through the reciprocal opening up of trade between EC member countries as soon as possible and not later than 1992. It also concluded that a measure of price protection for Macfarlan Smith's customers in the United Kingdom was necessary and recommended that the company should be required not to increase its maximum prices for reference products to these customers for a period of three years, except in the event of substantial and unavoidable increases in its costs.

We accept the commission's findings that the monopoly has effects adverse to the public interest and agree that it is most important to increase competition in this market. Therefore my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State will discuss with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, the best means to relieve Macfarlan Smith's customers from the company's abuse of its monopoly power while maintaining adequate safeguards against illicit trade. We hope to achieve this quickly so that a price freeze in the interim will not be necessary. Meanwhile my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State is inviting the Director General of Fair Trading to seek an undertaking from the monopolist that it will continue to make its list of maximum prices available to customers.

Girobank

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made in finding a suitable buyer for Girobank.

Mr. Newton: After detailed discussion with a number of interested parties, the Post Office board has decided to accept the conditional offer made by the Alliance and Leicester building society to purchase Girobank plc. I have endorsed this decision which I am satisfied takes full account of the factors for the sale set out by myself and my predecessor.

I understand that the Alliance and Leicester's conditional offer to the Post Office is to acquire the equity and subordinated debt of Girobank for £130 million subject to completion adjustments. The Post Office will now enter into detailed negotiations with the Alliance and Leicester with a view to completion as soon as practicable within the coming weeks. My consent will be required before the final sale can take place.

In addition, the requirements of the relevant competition legislation will need to be satisfied and the agreement of the Bank of England will be needed to the operation of the bank under a new owner. If the negotiations are successful the Alliance and Leicester will also need to satisfy the Building Societies Commission before the sale is completed.

Arms Exports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the attendance of British arms companies at the forthcoming Baghdad international arms fair, he has any plans to change the current restrictions on the export of arms to Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 19 April 1989]: There are no plans to change the current restrictions on the export of arms to Iraq which impose an embargo on the export of lethal equipment. A licence is required for the export to Iraq of goods which are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, 1987, (SI 1987 No. 2070) as amended.

Applications for such licences are examined in particular against the guidelines on the export of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq announced to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 at column 454. The guidelines are kept under review in the light of developments in the situation there.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will indicate the criteria relating to the gravity of human rights violations committed by countries in relation to which arms export licences are sought which he uses in deciding whether to grant such licences.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 19 April 1989]: A licence is required for the export of arms which are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, 1987 (SI 1987 No. 2070) as amended. Licence applications are considered on a case by case basis, in accordance with stringent export control procedures which include, in particular, an assessment of the human rights record of the country concerned.

It is not our practice to grant a licence for the export of equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all current publicity campaigns being conducted by or for the Department of Trade and Industry or ones planned for the first three months of 1989-90, indicating those which involve television advertising and the starting and finishing dates of each campaign.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 April 1989]: The information is as follows:

Campaign	Start	Completion
Enterprise Initiative[1]	January 1988	continuing
Single European Market	March 1988	continuing
Export Initiative	January 1989	continuing
Bridge Programme[2]	March 1989	May 1989

HEALTH

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any representations regarding the scope for self-governing hospitals to set their own rates of pay for staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received representations from a number of individuals and representative organisations on this subject.

DHAs and FPCs (Membership)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of district health authorities and family practitioner committee membership in England and Wales (a) in 1979 and (b) currently is made up of trade union nominees; and if he will make a statement on the criteria he uses in appointing district health authority and family practitioner committee members.

Mr. Mellor: In England district health authorities have only existed in their present form since 1982. No information is available centrally about members of family practitioner committees in 1979, since at that time they were appointed by area health authorities.

In England, currently 33 family practitioner committee members were nominated by trade unions. Information is not held centrally about district health authority members since they are appointed by the relevant regional health authority and local authorities. When appointing family practitioner committee members we endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance of age, sex, experience and geographical location. Regional health authorities are asked to do the same when appointing DHA members. However, all members are appointed on the basis of the individual contribution they can make and not to represent any personal or sectional interest.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Human Organs (Sales)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he intends to take to prohibit the sale of human organs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have today introduced the Human Organ Transplants Bill which seeks to ban the sale of human organs intended for transplant. The Bill would make it a criminal offence to:

make or receive payment for supplying, or offering to supply, an organ from a dead or living person;
act as a broker for such an arrangement;
advertise organs or for organs to be provided for payment;
transplant an organ from a living donor who is not closely related (cousin or closer relative) to the recipient, unless certain conditions are satisfied. These conditions would be set out in the regulations.

The regulations would specify the way in which the relationship between voluntary donor and recipient would be established and the conditions which would have to be satisfied for those who are not closely related. Responsibility for ensuring that the regulations were being complied with would be given to such authority as would be set up under those regulations.

Pharmaceutical Services

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue the promised clearer guidelines in respect of applications to provide pharmaceutical services.

Mr. Mellor: We have already issued advice on the effects of a judgment by the High Court on applications for the minor relocation of a pharmacy. We have been discussing these effects and a number of other matters with interested parties and will issue draft guidance for comment shortly.

Radioactivity (Accidents)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each district health authority (a) the establishment of medical physicists appropriately qualified to carry out the duties identified in circulars HC (89) 8 and HN (FP) (89) 8 and (b) the number of such appropriately qualified physicists in post at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not collected centrally.

Radiotherapy Physicists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the staffing levels recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection for radiotherapy physicists in terms of new courses on radiotherapy treatment.

Mr. Mellor: In 1985 the international commission on radiological protection published a document entitled "Protection of the Patient in Radiation Therapy". Page 39 of that document states that one of the goals for radiation oncology staffing is one medical physicist per 400 new patients treated per year.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each region (a) the number of radiotherapy physicists required to fulfil the staffing levels recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection in terms of new courses of radiotherapy treatment and (b) the number of such radiotherapy physicists currently in post.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally.

Hospital and Community Health Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was Government spending on the hospital and community health service budget as a proportion of the average household income in 1987-88.

Mr. Freeman: Gross expenditure on the hospital and community health service per household in the United Kingdom in 1987-88 represented 4·5 per cent. of average household income in that year.

General Practitioners

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there were in (a) 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available; and what is his estimate of future trends.

Mr. Mellor: The information required is set out in the following table.

Unrestricted principals in England

1987	24,922

The second advisory committee for medical manpower planning, which reported earlier this year assumed a growth of 1·5 per cent. per annum until the early 1990s followed by a decrease of 0·5 per cent. per annum up to 2005. Paragraph 7.22 of the White Paper "Working for Patients" sets out the Government's policy on GP numbers.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Freeman: Information to this level of detail is not collected by the Department.

Babies (Alcohol)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the maximum amount of alcohol that is assessed as acceptable for babies to consume daily; and if he will request the manufacturers of gripe water to label their products with the percentage of alcohol contained, to reconsider the amount of the recommended dose, and to display warnings of the dangers of exceeding it.

Mr. Freeman: I am advised that the small amount of alcohol contained in some gripe waters should not intoxicate babies if used responsibly by parents in accordance with manufacturers' instructions.

Family Practitioner Service

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the family practitioner service in 1978-79 and in 1987-88; and what was the total cost of drugs prescribed by general practitioners at those two dates.

Mr. Mellor: The gross costs of the family practitioner services in England, including capital expenditure but excluding administration and related costs, were £1,434 million in 1978-79, and £4,210 million in 1987-88. The gross cost of drugs prescribed by general practitioners in 1978-79 and 1987-88 were £558 million and £1,547 million respectively.

Family Doctors

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints were made against family doctors over the past five years.

Mr. Mellor: Complaints investigated by family practitioner committees against family doctors in England under the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 were:

	Number
1984	952
1985	1,286
1986	1,138
1987	1,027
1988	1,162

In addition some complaints are resolved by family practitioner committees on an informal basis with the agreement of the parties concerned.

Salary Scales

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the advances in the maximum of the personal secretary scale and higher clerical scale over the last 15 years.

Mr. Mellor: The maximum of the pay scales for personal secretary and higher clerical officer grades from 1 April 1974 are shown in the following table.

Effective from 1 April	Personal secretary £	Higher clerical officer £
1974	1,773	1,995
1975	2,274	2,553
[1]1975	2,388	2,691

1985	5,529	6,191
1986	5,885	6,556
1987	6,148	6,884
1988	6,474	7,228

[1] Effective from 1 July.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the practice of some health authorities of paying secretaries on the general administrative grade plus proficiency allowances; and if he will give a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold such information centrally. The grading of posts and payment of allowances are matters for individual employing authorities in accordance with agreements reached in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council. Under existing agreements proficiency allowances are not payable to staff on the general adminstrative grade.

Health Care (Rural Areas)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his future plans for provision of health care in rural areas of South Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: Provision and planning of local health services is a matter for the district and regional health authorities. Since responsibility for South Yorkshire lies with four district health authorities—Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield—the hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for the information he seeks.

TRANSPORT

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The numbers and percentages of women and ethnic minority staff employed by the Department at present are:

	Total	Women		[1] Recorded ethnic minorities
	Number	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
All grades	14,880	6,745	45·0	384	2·6
Grade 1	1	0	—	0	—
Grade 2	3	0	—	0	—
Grade 3	18	1	5·6	0	—
Grade 4	15	0	—	0	—
Grade 5	92	8	8·7	1	1·0
Grade 6	110	0	—	2	1·8
Grade 7	645	42	6·5	14	2·2

[1] Figures for numbers of ethnic minority staff are based on a voluntary confidential survey of staff; the response rate was 72 per cent. overall and 84 per cent. for grades 1 to 7.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department completed its voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff already in post in the autumn of 1987. This information is kept up to date on a continuous basis by asking job applicants to complete a questionnaire about their ethnic origin.

The Cabinet Office will be publishing the results of its national ethnic survey of all Departments later this year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Service Commission is responsible for recruitment of top grades to all Departments of the Civil Service. Recruitment and promotion are carried out on the principle of fair and open competition.

Transatlantic Flights (Prestwick)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the number of transatlantic flights (a) originating at Prestwick airport and (b) using Prestwick as an interim landing point in the years 1978 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not have this information. I shall draw my hon. Friend's question to the attention of the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, who may be able to provide it at least for the later years.

Scottish Lowland Air Traffic

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the review of Scottish lowland air traffic distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a large number of representations about BAA's request for a review of Scottish lowland airports policy, the greater proportion against changing it.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his review of Scottish lowland air traffic distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend is considering BAA plc's request for a review in the light of advice from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland; he will make an announcement in due course.

A17-A151 Junction (Lighting)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether the junction of the A17 road with the A151 is adequately illuminated at night.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We considered the provision of lighting carefully during preparation of the A17 New Washway road scheme. Lighting is both expensive and intrusive and can be justified only where it is expected to make a significant contribution to road safety. The provision of lighting to the west of Boston road roundabout, including the A151 link road junction, could not be justified.

We do not normally light isolated junctions in rural areas except as part of a larger system. Isolated clusters of lights can be dangerous because switching from darkness to light and back in quick succession can disorientate drivers on the main road. The proper way to warn drivers of a junction is by adequate signing. This has been done.

Mersey Tunnels (Tolls)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make the orders authorising an increase in Mersey tunnel tolls; whether he intends to use his powers under the County of Merseyside Act 1980 to confirm or modify the toll levels for fiscal year 1989-90; how any waiving of interest repayments would be authorised and financed; what are his long-term plans for the financing of the Mersey tunnels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 14 April a letter was sent to the Merseyside passenger transport authority informing it of the Secretary of State's decision to confirm, with modifications, its order setting new toll levels for the Mersey tunnels. The order will be made shortly.

The long-term financing of the tunnels is the responsibility of the PTA. I hope there will now be fresh discussions with the PTA about its options for putting the finances of the tunnels on a sound basis.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider lifting tolls on the Mersey tunnels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Mersey tunnels were promoted by the local authorities under legislation on the basis that they should be tolled. The legislation does not provide for the Secretary of State to abolish tolls.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission a study into the potential increase in traffic using the Mersey tunnels should tolls be lifted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Mersey tunnels are the responsibility of the Merseyside PTA. Any such study would be a matter for it.

Motorways (Speed Limit)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has conducted to establish whether a 70 mph limit on motorways is conducive to bunching.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is little evidence to suggest that the introduction of the 70 mph speed limit on motorways has contributed to dangerous bunching. The limit has, however, contributed to a reduction in accidents on motorways rather than the increase which might be expected if dangerous bunching was on the increase. The severity of injuries is also lower at lower speeds.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information for regions in England is:

Properties owned by the Department and suitable for residential accommodation

Region	Number	Percentage empty for up to a year	Percentage empty for over a year
South West	139	15	5
Eastern	365	2	1
South East	210	7	3
North West	406	—	—
East Midlands	104	11	10
West Midlands	82	11	5
London	866	2	3
Yorkshire and Humberside	54	13	11
Northern	29	—	—
England total	2,255	4	3

In Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales the respective Secretaries of State are responsible for the management of land purchased for national road schemes.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent in 1988-89 under the national roads England vote (class VIII, vote I).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure is provisionally estimated at £1,021·6 million, less than 2 per cent., some £20 million, below the cash limit of £1,041·4 million. This reflects commitment to making full use of provision for roads expenditure within the discipline of cash limits.

Air Security

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the introduction of mandatory protective measures for modern aircraft requiring (a) the fitting of locks to doors and latches and (b) the reinforcing of bulkheads and control systems from possible explosive damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The question would be more appropriately directed to the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation. I shall bring the hon. Member's concern to the attention to the chairman.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of Education and Science owns no residential accommodation.

Modern Hebrew

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representations he has received about the status of modern Hebrew in the GCSE curriculum;

(2) if he will make a statement about the position of modern Hebrew in the GCSE modern language schedules;

(3) if he will consider revising the GCSE schedules to include modern Hebrew; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any issue concerning the GCSE in modern Hebrew. We assume that the hon. Member is referring to the draft order on modern foreign languages in the national curriculum and the proposals which my right hon. Friend announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 3 March at column 338. My right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations from organisations, local education authorities, teachers and others about the place of modern Hebrew in the national curriculum. We are at present considering the responses received during the consultation period.

Universities (Grants)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the University Grants Commission under its present powers, can divide grants to universities into separate blocks for teaching and for research.

Mr. Jackson: This would be within the powers available to the Universities Funding Council under the Education Reform Act 1988.

Teachers (Incentive Allowances)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a calculation, in relation to his Department's figure of total baseline costs of school teachers' incentive allowances shown in appendix A of Cm. 625, showing how the total figure was derived from the expected numbers of allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The derivation of the figure for the total baseline costs of incentive allowances shown in appendix A of the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions is set out in the following table:

Estimated numbers[1] and cost[2] of incentive allowances, financial year 1989-90

Rate	Level of allowance (£)	Numbers in ordinary schools (000's)	Numbers in special schools (000's)	Total numbers (000's)	Total cost (£ million)
A	801	53·5	0	53·5	49·4
B	1,200	54·2	11·5	65·7	90·8
C	2,400	14·8	2·1	16·9	46·7
D	3,201	26·1	0·3	26·4	97·4
E	4,401	8·9	0·1	9·0	45·6
Total					329·9

[1]Numbers are a financial year average of the estimates for the school years 1988-89 and 1989-90. These take the accelerated introduction of the A allowances into account.

[2]The total cost figure includes employers' oncosts.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what announcements he made in 1988, in relation to school teachers' pay and allowances for 1988-89, concerning the total value or cost of incentive allowances payable in that year; if he will publish a calculation for each such figure of total value or cost showing how the total figure was derived from the expected numbers of allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend made no such announcements in 1988.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects people who are terminally ill to be able to claim attendance allowance immediately, in line with the recommendation of the recent Social Security Advisory Committee report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 6 February at column 490.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr Peter Lloyd: All property occupied by the Department is vested in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment; any surplus property is returned to the Property Services Agency for reuse or disposal as appropriate.

Social Fund

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many referrals have been made to the social fund inspectors; of these, how many have been referred back to Department of Social Security local offices for reconsideration; how many of the decisions referred back to the local office have been altered and if he will also split the figures issued (a) between community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans and (b) and by region.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am advised by the social fund commissioner that between 11 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 social fund inspectors received 2,954 applications for review. A total of 1,109 cases have been referred back to social fund officers for determination. The regional details are as follows:

Community Care Grants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will issue a direction extending eligibility for community care grants to people leaving institutional care whose income is above income support level because they are entitled to invalidity benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 16 December at column 750-51.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for the financial year 1988-89, the number of claimants who were awarded and accepted (a) a social fund loan and (b) a community care grant as a percentage of the total number who received single payments in 1987-88; and in each case, what was the proportion which these represented of the total number of income support, supplementary benefit, claimants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of individuals receiving an award is not collected.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for the financial year 1988-89, the number of income support claimants awarded and accepting (a) two budgeting loans, (b) three budgeting loans, (c) four budgeting loans, (d) five budgeting loans and (e) six or more budgeting loans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state, for the financial year 1988-89, the number of his Department's local offices spending less than (a) 50 per cent., (b) 60 per cent. and (c) 75 per cent. of their community care grant budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information for the period April 1988 to February 1989 is available in the Library.

Information for March 1989 will be placed in the Library later this month.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state, for the financial year 1988-89, the proportion of total social fund expenditure which has been subsequently written off as unrecoverable.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is available only for the period ending 30 September 1989. The details are set out as follows and are provisional:

Funeral payments	6,354,434
Budgeting loans	4,315
Crisis loans	10,920

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state, for the financial year 1988-89, the proportion of social fund loan application refusals which were issued on the grounds of the claimant's inability to repay.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Only 1 per cent. of applications processed were refused on grounds of the applicant's inability to repay.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the value in real terms both in absolute figures and as a percentage, of retirement and other state pensions and all other welfare and national insurance benefits and allowances paid in November 1979 in relation to those to be paid from April 1988; and if he will indicate the actual figure for each benefit in each year.

Mr. Scott: The comparisons requested between benefit rates in November 1979 and April 1988 are set out as follows. Comparisons are given only for those benefits in existence at both dates. Benefit rates for the intervening years are set out in "Social Security Statistics 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security further to his reply of 14 April to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan, Official Report, column 743, on deductions from benefits for payment of the poll tax, on what authority the interim advice to which he referred was given.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The interim advice was issued on the authority of officials within the headquarters of the Department. It took the form of an internal management memorandum and was designed to keep regional and local staff abreast of developments in this area. The content of the memorandum paraphrases the Community Charges (Deductions from Income Support) (Scotland) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 507) which came into force on 8 April 1989.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the level of child benefit in 1989-90 if the increase in tax-free income of taxpayers with children were maintained at the same level as that of taxpayers without children in relation to the 1978-79 level.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 December 1988]: Child benefit is a part of the public expenditure programme not a personal allowance against income-tax. For the purposes of answering this question, in the table, personal income tax allowance in both 1978-79 and 1989-90 have been converted into tax revenue foregone and added to the annual value of child benefit in each year. The results suggest that, in order to restore parity in the coming financial year with 1978-79 for married taxpayers with and without children, child benefit would have to be reduced by 32p for one-earner married couples with one or two children and by 17p for couples with three children. If the comparison were based on single taxpayers, the corresponding reductions would be 50p and 30p.

Reductions in child benefit needed to maintain the 1978-79 level of tax-free income for taxpayers with and without children

Change in child benefit required in 1989-90 to restore to position in 1978-79 (£ per child per week)	—	—	−0·58	−0·49	−0·30

Notes:

1. Tax free income is calculated by applying the standard rate of tax to the appropriate tax allowances and adding the annual value of Child Benefit in payment. For example, tax free income in 1989-90 for a one-earner married couple with one child is calculated as: 25 per cent. (standard tax rate) × £4,375 (married man's tax allowance) = £1,093·75 plus £377 (Child Benefit of £7·25 per week for 52 weeks). Total tax free income = £1,470·75.
2. Figures for 1978-79: tax allowances—single person's £985, married couple £1,535, children under 11 £100, children between 11-15 years £135. Tax rate 33 per cent. Child Benefit £2·57 per week.
3. Figures for 1989-90: tax allowances—single person £2,785, married man £4,375. Standard rate of tax 25 per cent. Child Benefit £7·25 per week.
4. All figures are subject to rounding.

DEFENCE

Pyrton

Mr. Heseltine: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which military units and civilian contractors have been responsible for construction work at the depot site in the parish of Pyrton in the county of Oxfordshire;

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of any documents held by his Department relating to the acquisition, planning status, construction, rating and occupancy of the depot site in the parish of Pyrton in the county of Oxfordshire which have not been released to the public record office;

(3) which detachments of troops have occupied the site of the depot in the parish of Pyrton in the county of Oxfordshire since its completion, indicating the dates of duration of each occupancy.

Mr. Neubert: The property was transferred to the Department of Environment in 1981. I regret that the details requested are not to hand. I will write to my right hon. Friend.

Armed Forces (Pensions)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether the new provisions for members of the armed forces to make additional voluntary contributions to their pensions relating to payments additional to their basic salaries have been adequately publicised.

Mr. Neubert: Arrangements under which members of the armed forces pension scheme may make freestanding additional voluntary contributions based on additional pay were widely promulgated to service personnel in January of this year. In order to provide the maximum possible time for personnel to take advantage of these arrangements within the 1988-89 tax year, promulgation was by signal. Further publication was intended to follow but has been deferred pending review and clarification of the provisions which will be appropriate when the proposed changes in AVC requirements and limits for tax relief purposes, announced during the Budget statement, take effect. I am satisfied that in these circumstances arrangements which are currently available to members of the armed forces have been appropriately publicised.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Neubert: Statistics are not collected in quite the form requested. The latest figures available show that on 30 November 1988 there were 78,520 tri-service married quarters, of which 14·4 per cent. had been vacant for under a year and 5·8 per cent. vacant for over a year. At 30 September 1988, of 1,828 civilian houses (including 263 leased from local authorities) 6·2 per cent. had been vacant for under six months and 7·1 per cent. for over six months.

Some of these vacant properties are in the process of disposal, others will be undergoing major maintenance or refurbishment, and yet others will be allocated and awaiting the arrival of the families to the unit.

The breakdown by region is:

Percentage vacant by region
Tri-service married quarters (as at 30 November 1988)

Region	Under 1 year	Over 1 year
Northern	14·4	5·8

Territorial Army Bases (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to commission an investigation into the security of Territorial Army bases in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Security of all Ministry of Defence establishments and bases is kept under constant review as a matter of course. I have no plans at present to commission a specific investigation into security at Territorial Army bases in Northern Ireland.

Gibraltar (Incident)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the special explosives ordnance team was sent to Gibraltar to assist in the operation in Gibraltar on 6 March 1988; when it left the United Kingdom; and when it returned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As was made clear at the inquest, it would not be in the public interest to reveal details about events prior to 6 March 1988 as these could reveal the intelligence background to the operation and methods of operation of the security forces. An explosives ordnance disposal team was sent to Gibraltar when requested by the commissioner of police. They were present in Gibraltar at the time of the incident, carried out render-safe procedures on the suspected car bomb in the white Renault car, and returned to the United Kingdom shortly afterwards.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the officers, who examined the Renault car parked in Main street, Gibraltar on 6 March 1988, concluded that it did not contain a bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Widows' Pensions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the level of pensions paid to widows of military personnel; and what information he has on equivalent pensions for those in other countries of the European Community.

Mr. Neubert: The pensions paid to the widows of military personnel under the armed forces pension scheme are at rates which depend upon the individual circumstances of each case. Factors which will affect the rate payable include the rank held by the husband, the date of his retirement or death in service, the provisions of the scheme at that date, the nature of his termination of service, and in most but not all cases the length of service given. It is not therefore possible to provide the information requested.

Nuclear Installations (Overflying)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what air traffic control restrictions apply to military aircraft in relation to flights over nuclear installations.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my predecessor gave to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 16 November 1987 at column 432.

Lance Missile

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from his United States counterpart concerning the length of time required to modernise the Lance missile; and what assessment he has made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Administration have kept allies fully informed about their development programme for a successor to the Lance missile. The selection by the United States of a launcher at the end of last year was geared to having a new system available for development by the mid-1990s.

Battle Tanks

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many main battle tanks are in operational service with the British Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to page 6 of the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any main battle tanks that are currently in operational service are used as a source of spare parts for other main battle tanks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In order to maximise operational availability, it is established practice to use tanks awaiting repair as a source of spare parts for other main battle tanks when the parts needed are not readily available through the normal supply chain.

Namibia

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training the British contingent of the United Nations transition assistance group receives in peacekeeping operations prior to its deployment to Namibia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Prior to deployment, the British contingent to UNTAG (Britcon) underwent a training period during which they practised general military skills, were familiarised with aspects of peace-keeping operations, and were briefed on particular problems that they would encounter in Namibia such as the extremes of climate and the necessary medical precautions that they would need to take. They also practised their primary and specialist role, which is the provision of the force signals unit. In addition, the areas in which they were to operate were thoroughly reconnoitred.

It should be borne in mind that UNTAG is not primarily a peace-keeping force but is there to monitor and supervise Namibia's transition to independence.

Trawler Nets (Irish Sea)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what United States submarines were in the Irish sea during 17 April; and if any reported an incident with the nets of the trawler Laurel;

(2) if a British submarine was involved in an incident on 17 April in the Irish sea with the fishing nets of the trawler Laurel, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that a United States Navy nuclear submarine was in the vicinity when the fishing vessel, Laurel, reported early on Monday 17 April 1989, that she had been towed backwards after a submerged object snagged her nets. When the submarine surfaced, it was found to have sustained superficial damage consistent with involvement in such an incident. The United States authorities are investigating.

No Royal Navy submarine was involved.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Next Steps Initiative

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has identified any candidates for agency status under the next steps initiative within his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: Following preliminary studies in my Department I have decided that the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge, and the new veterinary medicines directorate which was set up on 3 April 1989 on the Weybridge site should be considered as further candidates for agency status. Feasibility studies will now be carried out with a view to the preparation of draft agency frameworks.

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of agricultural development advisory service staff time is spent on advising farmers about methods of preventing pollution of rivers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The 1988 edition of "Ministerial Information in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food" (MINIM), a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House, indicates the resources specifically devoted to the control of pollution in 1987-88. ADAS advisers do provide advice on environmental matters, including control of pollution, when responding to requests for advice on other relevant subjects.

Eggs (Imports)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that eggs imported into the United Kingdom will have been subjected to equally rigorous egg production and hygiene regulations as eggs produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 April at column 51. The monitoring system mentioned in that reply has now been put in place.

Post-Chernobyl Restrictions

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how long restrictions will have to remain in force on farms affected by fallout from Chernobyl.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how long restrictions will have to remain in force on farms affected by fallout from Chernobyl.

Mr. Ryder: We shall lift restrictions as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising food safety. The broad downward trend in radioactivity levels within the Cumbria restricted area in 1988 compared with 1987 was encouraging. However, whilst there are sheep above the 1,000 bq/kg limit, restrictions will have to remain in force. We shall be reassessing the situation in the light of the 1989 monitoring results to see whether there is scope for reducing the area subject to restrictions later this year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of farms, number of sheep and number of acres subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions as at February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: About 116,000 acres with some 80,000 sheep on about 150 holdings were subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions in February 1989.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of properties owned by his Ministry and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Four properties, less than 2 per cent. of the Ministry's holdings, are vacant; two have been empty for over a year. Three are in Cambridgeshire and one in Hertfordshire. All are being sold. In addition, there are a small number of properties on experimental centres which are temporarily vacant pending occupation by employees.

Aluminium Additives

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to which foods aluminium is added and for what purpose; and if he will make a statement regarding the necessity for, and safety of, aluminium food additives.

Mr. Ryder: The Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973 (as amended) permit the use of aluminium for the external colouring of dragees and for the decoration of sugar-coated flour confectionery only. In its report on these regulations the food advisory committee recommended that it should be made clear in future regulations that permission to use aluminium, silver and gold on dragees extends only to the traditional cake decoration dragees. The Government are currently considering the results of consultations on the report.

Medical advisers in the Department of Health have advised that the regular consumption of larger aluminium-coated confectionery is undesirable because this may lead to an intake of aluminium by children in excess of the provisional tolerable weekly intake recently recommended by the joint FAO/WHO expert committee on food additives.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the county councils that have received grants for the disposal of bovine carcases infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and what is the amount paid per animal in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: County councils do not receive grants for the disposal of carcases, which is the responsibility of the state veterinary service. On occasions when assistance is provided by county councils, the Ministry pays any appropriate charge. Details of amounts paid are not held centrally.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts paid by different county councils to farmers for the disposal of each bovine carcase infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr Donald Thompson: Compensation is paid by the Government to farmers who have animals slaughtered because of bovine spongiform encephalopathy. The disposal of carcases is the responsibility of the state veterinary service and no payments are made by county councils.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the incineration plants within each county for the incineration of bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 23 March at column 722.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a list showing the cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy confirmed in each county for the latest four week period.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

County	Confirmed cases

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 April to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, how many of the 40 confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy were reported from EEC export approved slaugherhouses and how many were from non-EEC approved slaugherhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle have been incinerated at each of the locations listed in his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 23 March, Official Report, column 722.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not held centrally.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff he has employed to evaluate old pesticides since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 23 March 1989 at column 726. Since many of my staff in the Ministry's pesticides data evaluation unit have been involved in reviews as well as other evaluations it is not possible to identify precise numbers.

Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the becquerel readings of each of the 40 sheep selected from within the restricted area of Cumbria used in the feasility study into monitoring of sheep carcases at slaugherhouses in December 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The readings (becquerels per kilogramme) from the special instrument calibration trial were as follows:

	Readings
173	579
191	605
236	620
258	642

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what purpose the sheep involved in the December 1988 feasibility study into the monitoring of sheep carcases in slaughterhouses, referred to in his press release of 14 April, were intended to be used.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The sheep involved in the December study were specially selected from within the restricted area for scientific purposes. No part of the carcases went for human consumption.

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to conduct an aerial survey for radioactivity in the 20 per cent. of the restricted area not covered in 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no such plans at the present time.

Sectoral Quotas

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the reasons for the delay of some three months in the allocation of the sectoral quotas to the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Fisheries Departments hope to contact the industry shortly about a new and important issue which has arisen since the general arrangements for 1989 sectoral allocations were agreed in consultation with the industry last October. The original target for the notification of final allocations was the end of March.

Sewage Waste

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the life cycle in salt water of sewage waste dumped off the north-east coast of England.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sewage sludge is the byproduct of sewage treatment and is more than 95 per cent. water. The solid component consists of inorganic material such as soil, grit, sand and so on from run-off, together with organic solids such as those derived from food wastes, human and animal excreta and detergents. The organic solids are predominantly natural materials which are degradable in the marine environment by the action of dissolved oxygen, light and the diverse natural microbial flora. The rate of degradation varies according to the source of the individual components and the degree of sewage treatment. The ultimate products of degradation are carbon dioxide, inorganic nitrogen compounds and water.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the health implications for fishermen fishing in water off the mouth of the river Tyne of the dumping of sewage waste;

(2) what advice he has given to fishermen fishing in waters off the north-east coast of England in the vicinity of the area used for the dumping of sewage waste.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The subject of sewage disposal at sea and fishermen's occupational health was raised by representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations at a recent meeting with my officials. Arrangements were agreed with the fishermen's representatives for the reporting of medical evidence on this matter to the appropriate authorities, the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service.

RV Corystes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many days in the first four months of the current year the RV Corystes (a) was due to be in place and (b) was in place off the north-east of England.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A 16-day cruise off the north-east coast of England is due to begin on 25 April.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether scientists on his research vessel Corystes monitors for AIDS, hepatitis, meningitis, polio and other disease micro-organisms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Bacterial counts are taken on Ministry research vessel cruises in the area of sites licensed for the dumping of sewage sludge from ships. The measurements are taken from seabed sediments for the purpose of assessment of the fate of the material disposed of at sea.

Food Protection (Sea Fish)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the revocation of the Statutory Instrument, Public Health, Food Protection (Emergency Provisions) (Sea Fish) Order 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 529); and what plans he has to introduce an alternative instrument.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 19 April. We shall continue our programme of sampling fish and crabs landed at south coast ports. Any necessary further restrictions will be introduced should this reveal evidence of lindane having leaked into the aquatic environment.

Infant Formulae (Aluminium Content)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has further information on the aluminium content of infant formulae.

Mr. Ryder: My Department's food science division has recently carried out a survey of the aluminium content of 10 brands of commonly available infant formulae. The Department of Health's independent expert committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has considered the results of the survey. It concluded that the intakes of aluminium are well within the safety limits established by the World Health Organisation. Despite this it asked for further research to be undertaken, which will show whether or not further action is needed. Research on the bioavailability of aluminium from food has been commissioned at Southampton university. Work is in hand on identifying the forms in which aluminium occurs in foods and investigating the precise source of the aluminium in infant formulae. Consideration is also being given to the further work needed on the gastro-intestinal absorption and renal clearance of aluminium by infants.

Further information is contained in a food facts press notice being issued today, copies of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wakefield Prison (Chapel)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what chapel facilities exist at Wakefield prison for prisoners segregated on rule 43; when work was commenced on refurbishing the chapel; and when this work will be completed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Rule 43 prisoners segregated for their own protection may attend the temporary chapel at Wakefield prison but those who are segregated for reasons of good order and discipline may not. This is partly because of the location of the chapel and partly because of the nature of the offenders and offences concerned. The number of rule 43 prisoners who may not attend fluctuates between about 15 and 30, not all of whom will be practising Christians. Chaplains visit prisoners every day and will take private services for any prisoner who so requests.

A date has not yet been fixed for commencement of the refurbishment of the permanent chapel.

Quality of Life

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in the Official Report details of those policies introduced by him since 1983 with the intention of improving the quality of life for the rural communities.

Mr. John Patten: Many of our policies on crime prevention are applicable to rural areas. We have issued a circular to the police and courts about the powers available to deal with outbreaks of disorder and issued guidance to the courts about arranging speedy court hearings after sudden outbreaks of disorder. We have strengthened controls on firearms and encouraged the creation of local farm watch and rural watch schemes to increase community co-operation in preventing crime.

Shotguns (Licences)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun licences were issued in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested for 1988 is not yet available. Corresponding information for 1987 is published in table 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin 33/88, a copy of which is in the Library.

Game Licences

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many game licences were issued in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 39,131 game licences were issued between 1 October 1987 and 30 September 1988.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available figures show that 126 staff in grades 1 to 7 and their equivalents are women: this is just over 11 per cent. In the unified grades, 9 per cent. of staff at grade 3, 18 per cent. at grade 5, 4 per cent. at grade 6 and 15 per cent. at grade 7 are women.

Thirty six members of staff in grades 1 to 7 and their equivalents described themselves in staff surveys as of ethnic minority origin. This represents nearly 4 per cent. of respondents in these grades.

In the Home Office as a whole, 23 per cent. of staff are women; and 4 per cent. of respondents to staff surveys described themselves as of ethnic minority origin.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All non-industrial staff in the Home Office were asked to state their ethnic origin in regional surveys conducted between 1983 and 1986. A further questionnaire was sent in September 1988 to those who had not previously responded. A survey of industrial staff will be undertaken shortly. People seeking posts in the Department are asked to state their ethnic origin when making their applications.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Hogg: Most senior posts are filled internally and the most important factor in increasing the number of ethnic minority staff in those posts will be their advancement over time through the promotion system. Considerable importance is attached to ensuring that they have every opportunity to do so. Recruitment direct to senior grades is generally conducted by the Civil Service Commission, and is always on the basis of fair and open competition. Advertisements make it clear that the Civil Service is an equal opportunities employer.

Women (Attacks and Murders)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1979 in England and Wales (a) the number of women murdered by their male partner and (b) the number of women attacked causing actual bodily harm by their male partner; and if he will show in his answer the percentage for each year this is of (i) all murders and (ii) all attacks causing actual bodily harm.

Mr. John Patten: Information relating to homicides is given in the table below; "homicide" includes offences decided by the court to be murder, manslaughter or infanticide and those cases in which a court decision has not yet been reached. Provision of information for years prior to 1982 would involve disproportionate cost. Information is not yet available for 1988 or 1989. Information is not available on the number of women attacked causing actual bodily harm by their male partner.

Female victims of homicides[1] in which the principal suspect was the spouse, former spouse, cohabitant or former cohabitant of the victim

1985	537	101	19
1986	576	109	19
1987	635	83	13

[3] Spouse, former spouse, cohabitant, former cohabitant.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office owns quarters available for members of the prison service. As the Home Office is in the process of selling surplus prison service quarters, precise information is not available on a regional basis, but a broad estimate is that 10 per cent. of quarters have been vacant for more than 12 months and 3 per cent. for less than 12 months.

The following information is available about accommodation owned by the Property Services Agency but managed by the Home Office. Four properties managed by the Directorate of Telecommunications have been vacant for more than a year: one in Somerset and three in Nottinghamshire. Two out of 12 properties at the civil defence college in North Yorkshire have been vacant for over a year. Four out of 37 properties at the fire service college in Gloucestershire have been vacant for less than a year and two for over a year.

Road Vehicles (Prosecutions)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under regulation 7(1) of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 and section 40(5) of the Road Traffic Act 1972 in each police force area in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1 January 1987, the information collected centrally does not separately distinguish contravention of regulation 7(1) of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, although information for 1986 indicated that there were fewer than 400 prosecutions nationally for vehicles with excessive dimensions. The information available for 1987 on prosecutions for vehicles in a dangerous or defective condition, is for all forces and is shown in table 5 of "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, 1987, Supplementary tables".

Mr. D. Miles

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason, and for how long, Mr. Dean Miles, prisoner 2672, has been held in the segregation unit at Her Majesty's prison, Albany; what category prisoner is Mr. Miles; for what category he was recommended; and why he is held in maximum security conditions in a dispersal prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Miles was removed from association with other prisoners at Albany prison on 10 November 1988 under prison rule 48, which allows for the segregation of prisoners pending adjudication. He continued to be segregated under rule 48 until 22 December, when his case was heard by the board of visitors and a disciplinary award of 14 days' exclusion from associated labour was made. This punishment was served in the segregation unit. On completion of the punishment the governor decided that Mr. Miles should be segregated from other prisoners, in the interests of good order and discipline, under prison rule 43. Mr Miles remains segregated under rule 43 at this time.

Mr. Miles is categorised as security category C. It is not unusual for category C prisoners to be held in prisons of a higher security classification, in particular if the governor of a lower security prison has requested their transfer on the grounds that they have proved unsuitable for the regime of a lower security prison. Prisoners' allocation and categorisation are reviewed periodically at a local level. I understand that the question of Mr. Miles' location is to be reviewed shortly.

Lollipop Persons

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the number of lollipop ladies and gentlemen in post in (a) the Ealing, North constituency, (b) the London borough of Ealing and (c) the Metropolitan police area against the agreed number required; if he will instigate an inquiry into their pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the number of persons employed on school crossing patrol duty is as follows:

	Strength	Establishment
(a) Ealing, North[1]	22	30
(b) London Borough of Ealing[1]	44	62
(c) Metropolitan police district	1,098	1,350

[1] The figures given are based upon the Metropolitan police divisions rather than constituency or borough boundaries. For the purpose of this answer, Ealing, North is taken to be the subdivisions of Ealing and Greenford, and the London borough of Ealing to be the divisions of Ealing and Southall.

The pay of Metropolitan police schools crossing patrols is being reviewed.

Sports Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made in implementing each of the recommendations made in the report by the committee of inquiry into crowd safety and control at sports grounds.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's proposals for giving effect to the safety recommendations in the final report were set out in a consultative document produced in June 1986. All of these proposals except amendment to building regulations guidelines codes have been implemented.

The question of structural fire precautions and means of escape in buildings (including covered sports stands) is under review as part of the Government's comprehensive overhaul of the building regulations. It is the intention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to issue a consultative paper by the end of this year seeking comment on a package of proposals dealing with these issues.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 which came into force on 1 January 1986 had already extended the police powers of search and arrest in ways which help them to deal with troublemakers at football grounds. The Public Order Act 1986 created a new offence of disorderly conduct to cover hooliganism in football grounds as elsewhere.

A further recommendation was to review the provisions of the Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1985 in relation to executive boxes. Following that review a relaxation of the controls over the sale and possession of alcohol in executive boxes was introduced in the Public Order Act 1986.

The Government's proposals for a membership scheme are contained in the Football Spectators Bill. This follows previous efforts to encourage the football authorities to introduce membership schemes on a voluntary basis.

Community Centres

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it remains the policy of the Government that community centres should be encouraged, supported and if necessary funded to provide facilities otherwise unavailable to a range of community groups.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office supports community centres through its funding of the National Federation of Community Organisations. The funding of individual centres is a local matter.

Female Prisoners (Education)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many females in Holloway prison were engaged in (a) work, (b) daytime education and (c) evening education on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 April 1989]: On 3 April 1989, the latest date for which information is available 109 inmates were engaged in work, 76 in daytime education and 40 in evening education at Holloway prison.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total average number per day during 1988 of females in Holloway prison engaged in (a) work, (b) daytime education and (c) evening education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Information held centrally relates to the period April to December 1988 and is not complete. Typically, some 40 to 50 inmates were working and about 85 were involved in daytime education, including vocational training courses. Information about the number of inmates participating in evening education is not readily available. However, on average, about 430 hours of evening education were provided each week.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many females in Styal prison were engaged in (a) work, (b) daytime education and (c) evening education, on the most recent date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 April 1989]: On 3 April 1989, the latest date for which information is available, 187 inmates were engaged in work and 41 in daytime education at Styal prison. No evening education took place on that particular date.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total average number per day during 1988 of females in Styal prison engaged in (a) work, (b) daytime education and (c) evening education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Based on information held centrally for the period April to December 1988, an average of 167 inmates were daily engaged in work and 74 in daytime education. Information about the number of inmates participating in evening education is not readily available. However, on average, about 170 inmate hours of evening education were provided each week.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR ADMINISTRATION

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the hon. Member for Colchester, North, as Chairman of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, whether his Committee has received any report from the commissioner on the progress of his inquiry into the Department of Trade and Industry's handling of the Barlow Clowes affair.

Sir Antony Buck: It is not the practice of Select Committees to comment on their proceedings except by way of a report to the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Workplace Inspections

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what inspection of the House of Commons as a workplace takes place to ensure that it meets statutory standards.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

In meeting its responsibilities for the care and maintenance of Crown buildings, PSA's procedures are prescribed, as a minimum, to meet the requirements of all relevant legislation affecting the safety of the workplace. These procedures are applied on the parliamentary estate.

Organic Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether organic food is served in restaurants and cafeterias in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply he received from the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on Tuesday 18 April. In future, whenever organic food is presented on a menu, its availability will be indicated.

Explanatory Memoranda

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what circulation is given outside the House to explanatory memoranda on Community legislation submitted to the House by Government Departments.

Mr. Wakeham: After deposit in both Houses, copies of explanatory memoranda are made available to the public primarily from the British library through public and other libraries.

ENVIRONMENT

Canary Wharf

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available on the £1 billion tax allowance to the developers of Canary wharf, whether this amount of tax concession was envisaged when the enterprise zones were established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

I cannot comment on the tax affairs of particular individuals or companies. The position generally is that a property developer who builds property for sale, whether within an enterprise zone or elsewhere, incurs his expenditure on revenue account and is entitled to relief for all expenditure incurred wholly and exclusively for trade purposes under the normal business expenses rules. The amount of relief available by way of the special 100 per cent. initial allowance to those who incur capital expenditure on the construction of property within an enterprise zone will depend on how the expenditure is split between business buildings and non-qualifying premises such as residential dwellings.

Planning Applications

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications have been refused by the local authority and subsequently reversed on appeal (a) in York and (b) nationally for each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information available from the Department's records is given in the table.

Year	Planning appeals Received	Decided	Allowed	Percentage appeals allowed 1985-86
York	16	14	5	35·7
England	17,839	14,130	5,581	39·5
1986-87
York	36	21	9	42·8
England	19,856	15,613	6,208	39·8
1987-88
York	37	38	14	36·8
England	22,482	18,474	6,955	37·6

Recreational Facilities

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what proportion of planning appeals concerning development of recreational open space professional lawyers represented (a) developers, (b) local authorities, (c) sports associations and (d) amenity and residents societies, over the most convenient representative period available.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HIP (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the annual housing investment programme approved for the London borough of Lambeth for five years up to and including the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: The total housing capital resources allocated to the London borough of Lambeth for these years are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	34·322
1986-87	35·587
1987-88	33·969
1988-89	30·683
1989-90	22·351

UDCs (Publicity)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of urban development corporation budget in both 1988-89 and 1989-90 is allocated for publicity, information and public relations.

Mr. Trippier: Information for each UDC is as follows:

Publicity/promotion as percentage of total expenditure.

UDC	1988-89	1989-90
Black Country	2·8	3·0
Bristol	16·8	nya
Central Manchester	17·2	7·3
Leeds	8·5	2·2
London Docklands	1·2	0·9
Merseyside	3·3	2·8
Sheffield	0·6	2·4
Teesside	8·2	5·9
Trafford Park	8·6	4·8
Tyne and Wear	7·1	5·8

"Planning Control in Western Europe"

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make any amendments to the planning system following the publication by his Department of "Planning Control in Western Europe".

Mr. Chope: We have published proposals to simplify and improve the development plan system in the White Paper "The Future of Development Plan"—Cm. 569. The study of planning control in Western Europe does not indicate the need for any immediate additional changes, but it provides valuable information which we shall take into account in our continuing review of the planning system.

UPGs (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the total amount of urban programme grants for the London borough of Lambeth for each of the last five years including the year 1989-90; and if he will indicate the extent to which each year's grant represented an increase or decrease in real terms on the previous year.

Mr. Trippier: The total amount of urban programme grants paid to the London borough of Lambeth in the years 1985-86 to 1988-89 was as follows:

Year	Grant £
1985-86	4,984,243
1986-87	5,070,520
1987-88	5,162,332
1988-89	4,268,983

The amounts paid over to the authority to date are in respect of final claims for 1985-86 and 1986-87. Amounts paid for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are in respect of interim grant claims; final claims have not yet been submitted for these years. All grant claims are subject to audit certification, and none of the above has yet been so certified. Any analysis of increase or decrease in grant levels would be premature.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to collect the local statistics relating to registration for, and payment of, the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: We are currently considering the information to be collected under the new arrangements.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on the new needs grant assessments under the community charge regulations for England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend will be making decisions this autumn on the new needs assessments to apply in England from 1990-91.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain powers to issue directions to community charge registrars to choose freezing of bank accounts as a method of enforcing either fines for non-registration or for non-payment of the poll tax.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cumulative total of private sector investment committed to urban development corporation projects.

Mr. Trippier: By end of March 1989 over £7 billion of private sector investment had been committed within urban development corporation areas.

Housing Associations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policies on (a) the management of (b) the purchase of land by, and (c) the introduction of the right to buy in relation to housing associations.

Mr. Trippier: Housing associations are restricted as a condition of grant in what they may pay for land, and purchasing procedures are monitored by the Housing Corporation and by associations' own auditors.

Secure tenants of registered housing associations normally have the right to buy, unless the association is a charity. New lettings by housing associations, as by other private landlords, will be on assured tenancies which do not carry the right to buy.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) of 30 January, Official Report, column 22, he will give for each available category of local government staff the numbers in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989, or the latest date for which figures are available, showing the net and percentage change in each case.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Joint manpower watch (England) annual change in full-time equivalents 1979 to date at December

Note: There is likely to have been some reclassification of staff between service categories over this period, so the figures for the two years may not be entirely comparable. Local authority functions have also changed over the period.

Building Regulations

Mr. Tony Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will approve the new building regulations; and when they will come into force.

Mr. Trippier: Consultation papers proposing amendments to five parts of the Building Regulations 1985 and to the approved documents which provide practical guidance on meeting the requirements in them were issued last year. The responses are still under consideration, but I hope that the amending regulations will be laid before Parliament by the summer, and that the amendments will come into operation early next year. The intention is that revised approved documents will be published at the same time the regulations are laid. Consultation papers on other parts of the regulations will be issued during the course of this year, but it is too early to say when these amendments are likely to be made.

BISF-designed Properties

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department has made with local building societies in Nottingham regarding offering mortgages to those who wish to buy BISF-designed properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Discussions are proceeding, and I hope to make a full statement very shortly.

Goods and Services

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions have been placed in relation to whom they are allowed to provide goods or services on (i) the Crown suppliers, (ii) the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre and (iii) the Property Services Agency's (a) project and (b) estates services divisions.

Mr. Chope: My reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 8 December 1988 at column 273 announced that the Crown Suppliers had been authorised to commence selling to the private sector, as well as to public sector customers. The Queen Elizabeth II conference centre can make its facilities available to any client meeting its standard conditions of hire. I am considering what freedom PSA should have to offer its services to other customers particularly after April 190, when its traditional Government customers are fully untied from the agency and able to buy services from the private sector.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of properties owned by his Department and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Ridley: As at 1 April 1989, 3·2 per cent. of the 433 residential properties owned by the Department of the Environment had been empty for less than a year and 5·5 per cent. for more than a year. Of these 34 per cent. are in the process of disposal on the open market. These properties are located in the following regions of the United Kingdom and local authority areas:

Scotland: Argyll, City of Glasgow, Midlothian, Inverclyde, Motherwell, Banff Buchan.
North East: Hambleton, Langbaurgh.
North West: Manchester.
Eastern: Brentwood, Suffolk Coastal.
London: Westminster.
South West: Cotswold, Isles of Scilly, Sedgemoor.
South East: Medina.

Water Privatisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will be taking to ensure that the privatised water authorities will not be able to increase the charges being imposed on their customers in order to maximise their market capitalisations when facing takeover bids from other companies.

Mr. Howard: In appointing water and sewerage undertakers under the Water Bill, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make it a condition of appointment that charges do not increase by more than specified amounts above the general rate of inflation. These limits will be subject to review by the Director General of Water Services. Companies will not therefore be able to increase charges above the limits set either by the Secretary of State or the director general in order to defend themselves against takeover bids, nor more generally to compensate for inefficient management.

Pollution Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum fine for offences under the Control of Pollution Act.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 22 March 1989 at column 631.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to charge operators under his proposed system of integrated pollution control.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office have today issued a consultation paper which sets out proposals for a new charging system to recover the costs incurred by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in implementing the system of integrated pollution control (IPC) of the major industrial dischargers of air and water pollutants and wastes.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's costs in granting integrated authorisations, sampling and monitoring discharges and enforcing the controls will be borne by the dischargers themselves rather than the general taxpayers, as happens at present.

This is an important extension of the principle that polluters should pay the costs of protecting the environment from their activities.

The proposed charges would cover about 70 to 75 per cent. of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's total expenditures associated with integrated pollution control. They would fully recover the costs of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's authorisation and inspection functions under IPC. They would not cover such Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution activities as support for policy development that serve wider Government objectives.

In working up these proposals, the Departments have paid particular attention to ensuring that the system is both practicable to administer and equitable. So a large site with a higher potential to pollute would pay substantially more than a smaller, less-polluting site.

Similar cost-recovery charging systems are levied in other European countries such as Germany and France.

The Government will finalise the details of the charging scheme in the light of the views expressed by interested bodies in response to this consultation paper.

North West Water

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what authority the financial director and corporate affairs manager have been appointed to North West Water plc; what are their salaries; and who is paying their salaries.

Mr. Howard: The appointments to which the hon. Member refers have been made by North West water authority to the posts of financial director and corporate affairs manager in the authority. It is envisaged that the appointees will continue to fill these posts in North West Water plc when that company is established under the provisions of the Water Bill. Staff salaries are the responsibility of the authority.

Council Tenants (Opting-out)

Ms. Mowlam: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of the advertising campaign advertising the rights of council tenants to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Trippier: A total of £524,000.

Ms. Mowlam: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the advertisements advertising the rights of council tenants to opt out of local authority control carried in the Sunday newspapers on 26 March.

Mr. Trippier: Approximately £77,600.

Art and Culture (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies and proposals in his draft planning guidance he has put forward for the future development of art and cultural facilities in London.

Mr. Chope: None.

Waste Disposal (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment in his draft planning guidance he has made of the transport and land use implications of the activities of the 16 waste disposal authorities in London; and what proposals he has made for their co-ordination.

Mr. Chope: This is a matter for the waste disposal authorities and the London waste regulation authority. Policies may be included in unitary development plans as appropriate.

Town Centres (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the future of strategic town centres in London; and what guidance he is offering the London boroughs in respect of their long-term development.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has considered the advice on strategic centres put forward by the London planning advisory committee. He does not consider that strategic centres should be designated in the guidance.

Leisure (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies and proposals in his draft planning guidance he has put forward for the development of recreation, sport and other leisure facilities in London.

Mr. Chope: Guidance is proposed on the recreational use of green belt and open land. Provision for recreation, sport and other leisure development is in general a matter for individual boroughs.

Transport (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what priorities he has set out for transport investment by the London boroughs in his planning guidance.

Mr. Chope: It is for the boroughs to determine their own priorities for future investment in their roads through their annual transport policies and programme submissions to the Secretary of State for Transport. The purpose of strategic planning guidance is to assist the boroughs to prepare their unitary development plans. The draft guidance proposes that these plans should describe boroughs' schemes and networks in accordance with their local road hierarchy and in relation to the strategic London road network.

River Thames

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals and policies are included in his planning guidance in respect of the river Thames for (a) co-ordinating development along its banks, (b) improving public access and (c) promoting its use for freight, passenger services and leisure use.

Mr. Chope: The draft strategic guidance says that boroughs should give particulr attention to the character of any development proposals on or near the river Thames. They should aim to maintain and improve public access, and bear in mind the Countryside Commission's proposed Thames path when preparing their unitary development plans. The promotion of freight, passenger services and leisure use are not matters for strategic guidance.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered designating the river Thames as metropolitan open land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The proposed policies for metropolitan open land set out in draft strategic guidance are not in general applicable to the river Thames.

Conservation (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy for conserving and protecting London's areas of special character.

Mr. Chope: Such areas can be protected by existing conservation and planning policies. The boroughs concerned should take these policies into account when preparing their unitary development plans.

Water Authorities Association (Advertising)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the amounts expended by the Water Authorities Association on (a) press advertising, (b) television advertising and (c) other advertising in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Howard: This is a matter for the Water Authorities Association.

Housing (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies and proposals are contained within his draft strategic planning guidance for London designed to improve access to affordable housing.

Mr. Chope: The draft guidance refers to the part that the planning system can play in alleviating the problems of access to housing by ensuring that there is an adequate and continuing supply of land for new housing; and that local policies allow for conversions of existing houses into smaller units and for redevelopment at higher densities where appropriate.

Business Development (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific locational advice he has given London boroughs for future business development apart from central London and docklands in his planning guidance.

Mr. Chope: The draft guidance proposes that boroughs should adopt a positive, flexible and realistic approach to business development throughout London. Planning policies for particular locations are a matter for the boroughs concerned, not central Government.

Footpaths

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for the latest convenient period for which figures are available, the number of letters received by his Department's offices in Bristol concerning footpaths on an average working day, the number replied to each day and the number which do not receive a reply within four weeks.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Figures are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Water Treatment Works

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet been able to consider the responses of the water authorities in England and Wales and the Water Companies Association following his request for each utility to carry out a thorough review of their management and operating procedures at water treatment works, particularly unmanned installations, as a consequence of the incident at the Lowermoor works of the South West water authority last summer.

Mr. Howard: Yes. We have received and considered the responses and I am pleased to report that a number of improvements have been made to procedures following the Lowermoor incident.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, asked water authorities to review, in particular, the matters set out on which separate comments are given.

(i) Waterworks Site Security. There have been some changes in key systems to ensure that access to installations is better controlled. The possible use of electronic systems is being considered in some cases together with improvements in boundary fencing.

(ii) Procedures for Receiving Chemicals at Works. Labelling of installations has been checked and improved where necessary, as have controls for receiving chemicals.

(iii) Remote Monitoring of the Final Treated Water. Additional monitors have been introduced, or are being considered. In addition, the Water Research Centre is doing work in this area to try to ensure that any accidental contamination of the water supply is detected before it reaches the consumer.

(iv) Internal Reporting Arrangements for Incidents. Greater emphasis is being given to ensuring that emergency reporting lines are clear and co-ordinated and that senior management is informed immediately of an incident that might result in contamination of public water supplies.

(v) Emergency Procedures, Including Liaison with all those concerned with Public Health Issues. Utilities have reviewed their procedures to take account of the lessons to be learned from the Lowermoor incident. In most cases, review is a regular practice. In particular, links with those concerned with public health issues have been reviewed and reinforced where necessary.

(vi) Other Issues. My right hon. Friend also asked the utilities to consider the usefulness of employing a technique known as the Hazard Study Technique, designed to predict the outcome of potential systems failures and to ensure that all systems are fail-safe. A number of the utilities are considering using this method, if they do not already do so. Many utilities inform consumers of matters such as the undesirability of consuming water from the hot tap or have proposals to do so. The prevalence of this unsatisfactory practice was one of the revelations arising from the Lowermoor incident.

Pollution incidents like Lowermoor are rare. But even one is one too many. It is vitally important that suppliers of drinking water take all reasonable measures to avoid such occurrences and that they are constantly alert and prepared to deal with any incident. This position can be secured only through regular review; learning from one's own and others' problems; and by holding regular exercises to ensure that staff are ready and trained to respond quickly and effectively to any incident that might affect water supply.

I am most encouraged by the responses that we have received following the reviews that have just been undertaken.

Tyne and Wear (Development Plans)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the preparation of unitary development plans for Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has today issued strategic guidance to assist the five metropolitan districts in Tyne and Wear in the preparation of unitary development plans for their area. The guidance covers the key issues identified by the local authorities and the Department—urban regeneration, retailing, transport and the environment.

A draft of the guidance was circulated for comment in December 1988. Comments were received from 47 organisations and individuals. The guidance has been revised in the light of these comments. A copy of the strategic guidance, together with a report on the consultation exercise, have today been placed in the Library of the House. Following the issue of the strategic guidance, commencement orders will be issued shortly to enable the local authorities to start work on preparing their unitary development plans.

Young People (Accommodation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has in respect of the number of 16 to 18-year-olds who live (a) with their parents, (b) in private rented accommodation, (c) in council accommodation, (d) in hostels, (e) in bed and breakfast or other board and lodging establishments and (f) sleeping rough.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The most recent estimates for the first three parts of the question are from the 1987 labour force survey. This shows (a) 2,030,000 16 to 18-year-olds living with their parents, (b) 40,000 in private rented accommodation (not with their parents), (c) 40,000 in council accommodation (not with their parents). The other numbers requested are not available.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council properties have been sold to council house tenants in Kirklees since 1979 to the latest year for which figures are available; what this is of the total stock; and how much income this has generated for the local authorities as a result of these sales.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Some 3,500 sales to sitting tenants have been reported by Kirklees district council between April 1979 and the end of December 1986; this is about 9 per cent. of the average stock over the period since 1979; the reported sales had a capital value (net of discount) of over £21 million. No returns of sales to sitting tenants have been received by the Department since December 1986.

Parish Councils

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish his estimates of the income raised for a 1p rate on the non-domestic properties in all parish council areas in 1989-90;

(2) if he will publish his estimates of the total amount of business rate income available to parish councils in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 April 1989]: This information is not available.

Rate Relief

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to change the operation of rate relief for non-profit making sports clubs with the introduction of the community charge in April 1990.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 19 April 1989]: On the introduction of the uniform business rate, local authorities will continue to have discretion to give up to 100 per cent. rate relief to non-profit making sports clubs. We are currently consulting the local authority associations and other interested bodies about how the cost of such relief should be borne.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information the Crown Suppliers privatisation unit has provided to those firms or groups who have expressed interest in purchasing the Crown Suppliers; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Chope: Following my announcement of 28 July, a number of firms and groups interested in purchasing the Crown Suppliers were sent a copy of that announcement, a copy of "The Crown Suppliers' Annual Report and Accounts for 1987" (already in the Library) and an information memorandum prepared by Samuel Montagu and Co. Ltd. I am arranging for copies of the information memorandum to be placed in the Library shortly.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Registration Numbers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 595, if he will describe the circumstances in which he allows the police access to the vehicle registration numbers in his possession in order to trace the owner of a particular vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulation 15 of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971 requires the Secretary of State to supply to the police, free of charge, such particulars as may be requested of any vehicle contained in the DVLC vehicle register. In practice the police national computer contains a register of vehicles and keepers including much of the information on the DVLC record, from which it is updated on a daily basis. Other vehicles information available to DVLC is provided to the police on request.

Regulation 15, which permits the release of this information takes precedence over the Data Protection Act 1984 provisions. Section 34(1) of that Act exempts the data held by this Department which is required to be made available by other enactments. Notwithstanding this exemption the DVLC has registered its computer data under the the Data Protection Act 1984 and adheres closely to the data protection principles.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 595, if he will describe the circumstances in which the police or security services could have access to the vehicle registration numbers collected by Autoguide or similar traffic systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The operation of a driver information system which was licensed under the Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Bill would have to comply with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. Sections 27 and 28 of the Act are concerned with national security and with crime and taxation.

Vehicles (East Sussex)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles in each band of excise duty are registered at addresses in East Sussex.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the December 1988 census there were 313,279 licensed vehicles registered in East Sussex. These are analysed by tax class groups as follows:

	Number
Private and Light Goods	280,024
Motorcycles, Scooters etc	12,172
Farmers Goods	580
General Goods	6,802
Exempt Vehicles (Emergency services, specialist road construction etc)	3,862
Exempt Vehicles (limited mileage on public roads section 7(1) Vehicle Excise Act)	260
Electric Vehicles	224
Hackney (taxis, buses)	1,560
Others	4,370
Unlicensed (used on private roads)	3,425

TSG and Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to make any additional allocations for 1989-90 in respect of TSG and capital allocations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amount of transport supplementary grant payable to local highway authorities for 1989-90 was determined at the time of the annual settlement. It cannot be changed.

Capital allocations for roads in 1989-90 have also been settled. However, supplementary capital allocations may be made if any of the resources earmarked for a highway project of national or regional importance, or for other local transport projects, are not in the event needed. It is too soon to say if there are likely to be such supplementary allocations this year.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the original forecast dates for improvements to trunk roads and local authority roads in connection with the Channel tunnel in Kent and East Sussex; and what is the latest revised forecast completion dates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not the Department's practice generally to give forecast completion dates for trunk road schemes in preparation since they are subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and detailed design. We have the Channel tunnel in mind in our planning and we aim to complete the major improvements in Kent and East Sussex as soon as possible.

The Maidstone to Ashford section of the M20 motorway is under construction. It is due for completion by mid-1991.

Local authority roads are the responsibility of Kent and East Sussex county councils.

M25

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have been killed and seriously injured on the M25 over the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many.

Provisional figures for the 12 months December 1987 to November 1988 show that there were 28 people killed and 130 seriously injured on the M25 motorway. More recent figures are not yet available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively, and overall in the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department respectively, are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

The Attorney-General: The table shows the number and percentage of women in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 in the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

	Lord Chancellor's Department		Treasury Solicitor's Department
Grade	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
3	0	0	1	10
5	2	7·1	3	7·7
6	14	25·5	16	29·6
7	27	21·3	8	20·0

A total of 5·6 per cent. of respondents to a survey of ethnic origins carried out in the Lord Chancellor's Department in 1988 were members of ethnic minority groups; the number of respondents in grades 1 to 7 is insufficient to provide reliable figures.

Two officers at grade 6, representing 3·7 per cent., and three officers at grade 7, representing 7·5 per cent. of staff at those grades in the Treasury Solicitor's Department are members of ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General when the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department completed the surveys of the ethnic origin of their employees in 1988, and continue to monitor the ethnic origin of all recruits to the Departments.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

The Attorney-General: The Civil Service Commission recruits by fair and open competition all staff graded executive officer and above. Thereafter, promotion is dependent upon performance in the grade and consideration of the officer's ability to perform the duties of the higher grade through Departmental procedures designed to test these criteria. The Civil Service is an equal opportunities employer and the ethnic origin of the officer plays no part in recruitment or promotion procedures.

Legal Aid

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Attorney-General how much has been paid each year in Northern Ireland during the past 10 years from the legal aid fund; and how many Queen's counsel, junior counsel and solicitors have received such payments in each year.

The Attorney-General: The figures for payments out of the legal aid fund for each of the financial years from 1978-79 to 1987-88 for each category of legal aid are as follows:

	Solicitors' fees £	Counsels' fees £	Disbursements £	Total £

Frederick Andrews

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to why the Official Solicitor in Northern Ireland refuses to make available copies of the financial records of Frederick Andrews, 1978 No. 516, to his family; and what information he has on the alleged mismanagement of the affairs of mental patient Frederick Andrews, 1978 No. 516, since he was placed under the Care and Protection Office.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier replies to him about this case on 25 February 1988, at columns 257-59. It would not be appropriate for me to comment further on this case.

Baby C

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to arrange for a full investigation into the public interest implications of the case heard recently by Mr. Justice Ward in the family division of the High Court in Leeds relating to the treatment of baby C; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is having inquiries made into the background to these proceedings, including obtaining a copy of any judgment, and will consider what implications there may be.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General if he will call for a report from the Official Solicitor into the public interest implications of the recent handling in the Leeds High Court of the case on behalf of baby C.

The Attorney-General: It is not part of the Official Solicitor's normal functions to report on the public interest implications of an individual case in which he is involved. The Lord Chancellor is, however, having inquiries made into the background of these proceedings, including obtaining a copy of any judgment, and will consider what implications there may be.

Wards of Court

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions over the last 12 months for which figures are available the medical evidence submitted in proceedings in the High Court in Leeds in cases pertaining to the medical treatment of wards of court has been withheld from the public and the media.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not available but generally it is the practice for the courts hearing wardship cases to sit in private.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions over the last 12 months for which figures are available proceedings in the High Court in Leeds pertaining to the medical treatment of wards of court have been held in camera.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available but the general practice of the courts is to hear wardship cases in private.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Official Solicitor routinely seeks a second medical opinion when he is acting on behalf of minors who are wards of court in proceedings pertaining to their access to medical treatment.

The Attorney-General: Where an independent medical report is needed in relation to wardship proceedings in which the Official Solicitor is acting as the ward's guardian ad litem, subject to the court's permission he routinely obtains one.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to request a report from Mr. Justice Ward of the family division of the Leeds High Court into the public interest implications of his reported decision to instruct doctors to treat a ward of court to die.

The Attorney-General: No. The exercise of the wardship jurisdiction is a judicial function and it would not therefore be appropriate for any member of the Government to ask a judge to report to him on any aspect of his decision in an individual case. The Lord Chancellor is, however, having inquiries made into the background to these proceedings, including obtaining a copy of any judgment, and will consider what implications there may be.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement setting out the reasons why he did not previously refer the House of Fraser report to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 April 1989]: As my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has indicated in another place, in his view there are no public interest grounds for such a reference.

ENERGY

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will assess the likely implications for the transmission by Channel 4 of public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the 90s: Competition, Choice and Quality".

Mr. Parkinson: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by Channel 4. The arrangements for paid Government advertising on television will not be affected by the proposals.

Yorkshire Coal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure a long-term supply contract for Yorkshire coal between British Coal and the Central Electricity Generating Board for export and to other outlets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have already made it clear that, while the new generating companies are likely to wish to buy a significant proportion of their coal needs on a contractual basis, the proportion of coal sold on contract and the length of the contracts is a matter for commercial negotiation, as in other sectors of the coal market.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq (Weapons)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government propose to change their current policy of prohibiting the export to Iraq of any weapon which could enhance its offensive capability, or will agree to granting export licences for the supply of weaponry to Iraq, to accommodate United Kingdom exhibitors at the first Baghdad international exhibition for military procurement; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have not changed their policy on defence sales to Iraq. Applications for export licences continue to be considered on a case-by-case basis, according to the guidelines as announced in the House by the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 at column 454, and in the light of developments in the peace negotiations with Iran.

Engagements

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what are her criteria for deciding whether to give priority engagements at home or abroad over being present to answer questions in the House on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The Prime Minister: I am present in the House to answer questions on Tuesdays and Thursdays as often as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Sylvan High School

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to consult the parents, pupils and staff of Sylvan high school about the proposal by the London borough of Croydon to close the school.

Mrs. Rumbold: Any local authority wishing to close a school must follow the statutory procedures laid down by the Education Acts. Under section 12 of the Education Act 1980, authorities must publish their proposals and submit a copy to my right hon. Friend. There follows a two-month period during which statutory objections can be submitted to the local education authority. Proposals concerning county schools fall to my right hon. Friend to decide if statutory objections have been submitted or if he exercises his power to call them in. In making his decision on proposals which fall to him to decide, my right hon. Friend weighs carefully the views expressed by those who support or oppose the proposals. My right hon. Friend expects the local education authority concerned—in this case, the London borough of Croydon—to have carried out appropriate consultation with those affected before publishing proposals.

Qualifications (Statutory Approval)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is his policy, in relation to the proposed circular on statutory approval of qualifications under the Education Reform Act, on approving the continuation for 1989-90 of existing two-year courses; whether he intends to approve all existing courses for 1989-90 in order to enable pupils to complete courses they have already started; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the efficacy of the arrangements made by his Department and the Schools Examination and Assessment Council to draw up a complete list of existing two-year courses for the purpose of enabling their completion by pupils before August 1990; what arrangements he proposes to make regarding (a) the statutory approval of any courses that prove to have been omitted from the first list to be approved and (b) enforcement of the relevant provisions of the Education Reform Act concerning unapproved courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall exercise my powers under section 5 of the Education Reform Act 1988 to approve qualifications on the advice of the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC). I expect shortly to receive the council's advice about qualifications for certification in July 1990 and July 1991. In considering that advice, I shall naturally have careful regard to the implications for pupils and schools. I expect to reach decisions next month. Those decisions will be made public and my Department will simultaneously issue a circular describing the basis on which they were arrived at and the procedures for implementation.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the overall cost to his Department, the Schools Examination and Assessment Council, local education authorities and schools of the recent draft circular on statutory approval of qualifications; what proportion of this overall cost relates to the list A compilation of courses which are to be given temporary approval for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A number of staff in my Department, the School Examinations and Assessment Council, local education authorities and schools have contributed to drawing up and responding to the draft circular on the approval of qualifications. That work in the great majority of cases represents a negligible addition to the duties of those at each level in the education system responsible for the administration of examinations. It would therefore not be meaningful to assess additional costs associated with that work, still less with any particular aspect of it; and to seek to do so would itself involve the Department and others in disproportionate cost. The cost of printing the draft circular was £3,410.

School Governors

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received representations concerning the increase in responsibilities placed upon school governors.

Mrs. Rumbold: There have been some representations on this point. But the successful recruitment of thousands of new governors last year suggests that they are not daunted by their new responsibilities. The Government are working to ensure that school governors get the support and training that they need to carry out their role effectively.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to review the method of assessing potential income from disposal of assets when making future capital allocations.

Mrs. Rumbold: From April 1990 the proposed new system of local authority capital finance, as outlined in the Local Government and Housing Bill, will allow Ministers, when determining annual capital guidelines and corresponding credit approvals, to take into account the ability of individual authorities to spend from their capital receipts.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Brazil

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his response to the Amnesty International report entitled, "Brazil, Authorised Violence in Rural Areas"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the allegations in the report with the former Brazilian Justice Minister when he visited Brazil in November 1988. The gist of this conversation was passed to Amnesty International last year. As we have told Amnesty International, we have no doubt that the case descriptions in the report are broadly accurate. But it is quite a different matter to assert that the federal government in Brazilia connives at the killings. We believe that Amnesty International may have overstated its case on this.

Economic Commission for Europe

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the names of the United Kingdom representatives attending the plenary session of the Economic Commission for Europe in 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom representatives attending the annual session (including the plenary and sessional committee) of the Economic Commission for Europe in 1989 are:

Mr. J. A. Sankey CMG, the United Kingdom permanent representative to the office of the United Nations at Geneva.
Mr. G. W. Hewitt, deputy permanent representative to the office of the United Nations at Geneva.
Mr. J. R. McCulloch, first secretary at the United Kingdom mission to the office of the United Nations at Geneva.
Mr. S. Wall, second secretary at the United Kingdom mission to the office of the United Nations at Geneva.

United Nations Organisation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the United Kingdom's contributions to the United Nations Organisation, and to its agencies, in each of the years from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Until 1987 no central record was kept of Her Majesty's Government's contributions through various Government Departments to the United Nations and its agencies. Since then the figures have been centrally collated and are set out in the table:

United Kingdom contributions to the United Nations regular budget and the specialised agencies from 1985-88

(£ million)[1]

Year	United Nations regular budget	United Nations agencies regular budgets	United Nations separate peace-keeping forces (UNDOF, UNIFIL and UNFICYP)[2]	United Nations agencies voluntary contributions	Total

1988	19·36	31·72	[3]32·26	81·73	165·07

[1]Because of different accounting periods of Her Majesty's Government and United Nations Bodies, exchange rate fluctuations and extraordinary items, such as donations to appeals following natural disasters, these figures, although a best estimate, should not be taken as definitive.

United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL).
United Nations Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP).

[3]Includes United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG) contribution. UNIIMOG commenced operation on 9 August 1988.

[4]Apparent decrease due to sharp decline in United States dollar.

Council of Europe

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the measures being taken to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Council of Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will represent the Government at the 40th anniversary celebrations of the Council of Europe in Strasbourg on 5 May 1989. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 14 February.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to help Hong Kong cope with the problem of Vietnamese refugees in the territory.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am very conscious of the financial burden that has been imposed on the territory by Vietnamese boat people. I have, therefore, decided that the Government should make a contribution of up to £6 million in response to an international appeal which UNHCR will shortly launch for funds to meet the capital costs of Pillar Point, a new refugee centre which the Hong Kong Government are constructing in the territory for refugees awaiting resettlement. This underlines our firm intention to help Hong Kong deal with this immensely difficult humanitarian problem in every way we can.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the employers in Northern Ireland the Fair Employment Agency has (a) chosen or (b) had discussions with to revoke or modify directions previously given under subsection 2(i) or 2(ii) under part II, section 13(5)(a) or (b) of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 to date.

Mr. Viggers: The tables provide details of cases heard by the county court. It is not normal practice to place judgments in the Library but they may be obtained on request from the county court, Courthouse, Crumlin road, Belfast.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which employers have made a compensatory payment to a complainant under the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976; and what were the sums involved in each case, the original date of each settlement and the eventual date of payment, from 1976 to the present time.

Mr. Viggers: This is a matter for the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency. I understand that there have been 41 cases, the details of which are in the following table. It would not be in the best interests of the work of the agency to release the names of parties involved in the cases under section 24 of the Act.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints under section 24 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976, of unlawful discrimination the Fair Employment Agency has declined to pursue; and what reasons have been given in each case.

Mr. Viggers: I understand from the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency that the agency has declined to pursue 137 complaints under section 24 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976 for the reasons specified:

	Number
(1) Adjudged Frivolous	35
(2) Outside the time limits	71
(3) Outside the Scope of the Legislation	15
(4) Considered by another Statutory Body	1
(5) Failure by Complainant to provide sufficient information	15

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints under section 24 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976, have been made against (a) public bodies, and (b) private employers; and what has been the outcome in each case.

Mr. Viggers: The position as at 31 March 1989 is shown in the following table:

	Private Sector	Public Sector	Trade Unions
Total Number of Complaints	391	432	3
Unlawful Discrimination	26	32	1

Section 42	1	26	—
Section 52	—	1	—
Withdrawn or not pursued	103	112	—
Outstanding	71	53	—

The agency's annual reports, which are available in the Library, contain an account of investigations under section 24 of the Act.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints by year under the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1976 have been discontinued by virtue of section 42 of the Act, listing the employing body in each case and the religious affiliation of the complainant.

Mr. Viggers: The recorded number of section 42 certificates signed by Northern Ireland Office Ministers in each year since 1976 is as follows:

Year	Number
1976	0
1977	1
1978	3
1979	0
1980	1
1981	3
1982	1
1983	1
1984	3
1985	1
1986	1
1987	2
1988	5
1989	1

Nine cases involved either the Northern Ireland Office or Northern Ireland Departments whilst the other 14 involved public bodies in Northern Ireland. It is understood that of the complainants involved, 20 were Roman Catholic and three were Protestants.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many subscribers there have been in Northern Ireland to the register for equal opportunity employers and organisations for each quarter since 30 April 1988; and how many of such subscribers have been removed from the register each quarter since since this date.

Mr. Viggers: The number of subscribers at the end of each quarter is as follows:

Quarter ended	Number of subscribers
31 July 1988	9,630
31 October 1988	9,817
31 January 1989	10,024
31 March 1989 (two month period only)	10,181

No subscribers have been removed from the register in this period.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the most recent unemployment rates by Belfast local government district wards in percentage and numerical terms.

Mr. Viggers: The numbers unemployed in each ward, within the Belfast district council area, at 9 March 1989, are as follows. Unemployment rates are available only for travel-to-work areas.

Government Aid

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by country of origin the firms in receipt of Government assistance that have opened or closed in Northern Ireland for the period for which details are available and the date of their opening and closure.

Mr. Viggers: The following list shows firms by country of origin which have opened since 1972 with assistance from the Industrial Development Board or its predecessor, the Department of Commerce. Those marked by [1] subsequently closed. The dates of opening and closure are not readily available and to identify them would involve disproportionate cost.

In addition, since 1979, the local enterprise development unit has assisted 4,011 small firms to begin operating. These were almost exclusively of Northern Ireland origin, and in many cases one-man businesses. Identification of these firms individually would entail disproportionate cost. Information on LEDU-assisted firms which closed in the period is not available.

[1] Denotes closure.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list and identify the medium, large and small companies who received Government assistance and which have defaulted on their loans; and how much in each case has had to be written off as bad debts for the period for which data is available, identifying in each case whether the company was supported by LEDU, the Industrial Development Board or its predecessor the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Viggers: Information about individual companies which have defaulted on loans from Government agencies is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The cumulative value of Government loans written off as irrecoverable by the agencies concerned is as follows. The local enterprise development unit, Northern Ireland's small business agency, has written off £2·5 million since it was formed in 1971. A total of approximately £37·5 million owed to the former Northern Ireland development agency and its predecessor, the Northern Ireland Finance Corporation, was written off between 1972 and 1982, comprising both share capital and loan investments. Since 1966, loans issued by the former Department of Commerce totalling £16,482,572 have been written off, as has £207,660 relating to loans issued by its successor, the Industrial Development Board.

Harland and Wolff and Short Bros.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average cost per job in Short Bros. and Harland and Wolff by year for the period for which data is available; and what will be the average cost per job to transfer these companies into the private sector over keeping them in the public domain.

Mr. Viggers: Government support for Harland and Wolff and Short Bros. takes various forms, some of which cannot be quantified in cost per job terms.

However, based on the external funding requirement (loans and Government grants) for both companies the average cost per job figures in each of the last five years has been:

	Harland and Wolff £	Short Bros. £
1983-84	7,286	3,000
1984-85	7,360	1,000
1985-86	7,494	4,100
1986-87	13,063	5,500
1987-88	14,342	16,300

Transferring both companies to the private sector will result in a decrease and not an increase in the level of future Government support to Harland and Wolff and Short Bros.

It is anticipated that there will be a cost to Government on a one-off basis in transferring each company to the private sector; thereafter each company will be regarded as eligible for Government support in line with other private sector companies in Northern Ireland.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving the amounts in the fiscal years 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 of payments made to (a) civilians under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, (b) members of the security forces (Royal Ulster Constabulary, Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, British Army and Ulster Defence Regiment) under the Criminal Injuries Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, (c) compensation payments made under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 and (d) compensation payments under the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 and subsequent legislation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: For the years 1985-88, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 4 November 1988 at column 826. The corresponding figures for 1988-89 are as follows:

	1988-89 £
Compensation payments to civilians under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	[1]11,632,823
Compensation payments to members of the security forces under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977	[2]3,298,305
Compensation payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978	1,258,294
Compensation payments under the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977 and earlier legislation[3]	20,606,264

[1] Includes £7,770 paid under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1988.

[2] Includes £850 paid under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (NI) Order 1988.

[3] The current criminal damage legislation is the Criminal Damage (Compensation) (NI) Order 1977.

Notes:

1. It is regretted that due to a computational error an incorrect figure (£686,242) was previously shown—column 826, 4 November 1988—under Compensation Payments under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 for 1987-88—the correct figure should read £578,699.

2. The amounts shown for 1988-89 may be subject to slight variation on completion of the appropriation account.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made on female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in each month from October 1988 to February 1989; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making a remand appearance at court, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

	October 1988	November 1988	December 1988	January 1989	February 1989
Number of searches
Total number of searches carried out	20	32	36	22	28
Total number of inmates searched	14	22	23	19	23
Number of prisoners searched once	8	14	14	16	19
Number of prisoners searched twice	6	7	7	3	3
Number of prisoners searched more than twice	—	1 (4 times)	2 (4 times)	—	1 (3 times)
Reasons for search
First admission on remand/awaiting trial	4	10	6	11	9
First admission on sentence/final discharge	12	16	13	7	17
Attending remand court	1	—	—	—	—
Attending trial	—	—	—	—	—
Inter-prison visits	—	—	1	—	—
Pre-release home leave	2	6	16	4	—
Visits to outside hospital	1	—	—	—	1
Returning from bail application	—	—	—	—	1

No prohibited article was found during these searches. On one occasion a prisoner refused to co-operate in a full reception search or talk to any member of staff. A full search was then carried out by two officers; the prisoner did not assist or resist as it was taking place.

Post-Chernobyl Restrictions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of farms, number of sheep and number of acres subject to post-Chernobyl restrictions as at February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 20 April 1989]: The following is the information:

Number of farms—123
Number of sheep—21,000
Area of land—21,612 acres

SCOTLAND

National Health Service Land and Site Values

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the land and site values referred to in paragraph 2.7 of the health White Paper.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to paragraph 2.7 of Scottish working paper 5 "Capital Charging", rather than to the White Paper Cm. 555. As indicated in paragraph 4.1 of that working paper, health boards are expected to record their capital assets and to value them on a provisional basis during 1989-90 and to refine these values during 1990-91. There are no plans to publish details of individual landholdings and site values of health board properites.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Luxembourg on 17 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The council reached agreement with a delegation of the European Parliament, under the conciliation procedure, on the regulations required to implement the new own resources decision of June 1989 which include measures to tighten controls against fraud.

The council had a further discussion of the Commission's proposals on taxation of savings, of direct tax measures to encourage cross-border co-operation between enterprises, and of the proposed 18th VAT directive.

The council discussed indirect tax approximation, stressing the need to consider alternative approaches for the abolition of fiscal frontiers.

The council heard a presentation from the Commission on the revised proposal for a second banking co-ordination directive.

The council adopted a common position on the proposed directive on own funds of credit institutions.

The President of the Commission outlined the main features of the report of the Committee on Economic and Monetary Union which is to be discussed further by the council. I made it clear that, while supporting practical steps within the framework of the existing treaty designed to improve economic and monetary co-operation, the United Kingdom cannot accept the transfer of sovereignty implied by the proposals for full economic and monetary union contained in the Delors report.

Internal Market

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total value at the latest available full year of public sector contracts in each of the European Community countries other than the United Kingdom of a character which will make them open to Community-wide bidding as part of the creation of the internal market.

Mr. Brooke: None. The cost would not be justified. Information is available from European Commission studies on the size of the procurement market in various industrial sectors in other member states but the value of the contracts to be opened to Community-wide bidding will depend on the coverage of the proposed directives and the threshold above which they will apply. The Commission is investigating the effect of setting the threshold at various levels.

EC (Payments)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) Official Report, 8 November 1988, column 112, what was the net payment made to the European Community by the United Kingdom for each year since 1979; and what was in each case the net payment to European Economic Community institutions as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is set out in the table.

Total net payments to European Community institutions[1]

	£ million	Percentage of money GDP
1979-80	841	0·4
1980-81	168	0·1
1981-82	117	0·1

1988-89	950	0·2

[1] Excluding overseas aid: for domestic public expenditure planning purposes, part of the United Kingdom's contribution to the Community budget is attributed to the overseas aid programme.

Treasury Stock

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of persons holding 2½ per cent. Treasury stock 1975 issued in 1946-47; and what is the size of the average holding.

Mr. Lilley: There are approximately 12,300 registered holders of 2½ per cent. Treasury stock 1975 or after with an average size holding of £38,700. It is impossible without undue cost to distinguish between personal and corporate holdings.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of redemption of 2½ per cent Treasury stock 1975.

Mr. Lilley: The cost of redemption of 2½ per cent Treasury stock 1975 or after would be £475 million.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to redeem 2½ per cent Treasury stock 1975.

Mr. Lilley: None.

Personal Imports

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to increase the duty free limit on personal imports of gifts into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The travellers' allowances for goods purchased duty free for importation as personal gifts are provided for under European Community legislation. The Government has long supported the Commission's proposals to increase substantially the £32 allowance for goods other than tobacco, spirits, wines and so on, but it has not so far been possible to obtain the necessary agreement of all member states.

Reverse Auctioning

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the practice of reverse auctioning of Government debt began; and how it is regulated.

Mr. Lilley: The first reverse auction was held in January 1989, and was carried out by the Bank of England.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which financial institutions or sectors have participated in buying Government debt through reverse auctioning.

Mr. Lilley: Only the Bank of England buys Government debt through reverse auctions. Figures are not available for the institutions or sectors selling stock, because many of the offers will be channelled through gilt edged market makers.

Figures showing transactions in Government stock by various sectors in 1989 Q1 (the quarter in which the first reverse auction took place) will be published in the May Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Government debt has been reverse auctioned over each of the last 30 years for which records are available.

Mr. Lilley: Only one reverse auction has been held so far and this took place in January 1989. This reverse auction was for £500 million nominal of stock.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of properties owned by Her Majesty's Treasury and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 20 April 1989]: (i) Nil; (ii) Nil.

Village Halls

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the consequences on village halls of the extension of value added tax on the construction of new buildings, fuel and power, water and sewerage supplies.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 April 1989]: Where village halls are engaged in business activities, VAT will be due on supplies to them of construction services and fuel and power. Water and sewerage services will, however, remain zero-rated. The imposition of tax on supplies of construction services and fuel and power is a consequence of the unwelcome European Court of Justice ruling published on 21 June last year. Business is defined widely in EC VAT law and could include the hiring out of village halls to local groups and other users.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state for each year from 1970-71 to 1987-88, and estimate for 1988-89 (i) the public sector net debt outstanding at current and 1988 prices, (ii) the net change from the previous year at current and 1988 prices and (iii) the components of the public sector net debt including assets such as foreign exchange reserves for each year both at current and 1988 prices.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The available information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Sainsbury: The numbers and percentages of women in senior posts are as follows:

Grade	Number	Percentage
1-4	2·0	1·8
5	13·0	3·7
6	10·0	1·2
7	111·5	3·6
Total 1-7	136·5	3·1

There are 41 (1 per cent.) staff at grades 1 to 7 who are from ethnic minorities all at grades 5 to 7.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has recently completed a survey in which all staff were asked to state their ethnic origin. Over 76 per cent. of staff responded. Information on ethnic origin is now sought as a matter of routine from all those who join the Department.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Posts in senior grades in the Department are generally filled through promotion from within. Members of ethnic minorities who have the appropriate qualifications are considered for promotion to such posts on the same basis as other staff. As I said in my reply of 24 June 1988 at column 740-41, a programme of positive action is now in hand which includes special steps to recruit staff from ethnic minorities. It is hoped that these steps will in time lead to a greater number of such staff being considered for senior posts.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 23 March, Official Report column 756, in which form central records hold information regarding low-flying sorties; and how the information requested in the questions can be obtained.

Mr. Neubert: For management purposes, central records of low-flying sorties are held as monthly and annual totals for the whole of the United Kingdom low flying system. The records neither show where the sorties originated or terminated nor which counties were overflown during the sortie. The information requested in the hon. Member's questions in the Official Report, column 756, of 23 March is not therefore available.

Brigade of Gurkhas

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the Brigade of Gurkhas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have made it clear that we intend that there shall be a continuing role for the Gurkhas in the British Army following the withdrawal from Hong Kong in 1997. We hope to be in a position to make a further statement soon.

United States Exercises

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the exercises involving United States forces personnel at RAF Nocton Hall in September 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: From 25 September to 4 October 1988 the United States Air Force wartime contingency hospital at RAF Nocton hall was activated for the reception of simulated United States casualties evacuated from Germany, via RAF Coningsby, as part of the aeromedical element of exercise Reforger 88.

Aircraft Shelters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the number of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation standard hardened aircraft shelters completed at RAF bases in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 for which numbers are available in the following categories; (i) shelters paid for directly by his Department, (ii) shelters paid for out of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme funds that are for use by RAF aircraft, (iii) shelters paid for out of United States Government funds and (iv) shelters paid for out of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme funds that are for use by United States aircraft;

(2) if he will give the number of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation standard hardened aircraft shelters at each Royal Air Force base in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to publish this information.

Service Schools

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he makes for out of school in-service training for (a) primary and (b) secondary teachers in each country where service schools are situated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Service Children's education authority arranges a wide range of out of school in-service training for primary and secondary teachers on a regular basis, both in the United Kingdom and in countries where service children's schools are situated. These are provided by LEA advisers retained by SCEA, Her Majesty's inspectorate and independent consultants, according to the subject matter.

In addition SCEA organises support visits to service children's schools over and above the normal in-service training, throughout the academic year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the pupil teacher ratio, the total pupil roll, the total number of teachers employed and the annual pupil turnover for each service secondary school.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Member.

WALES

Internal Market

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the total value to the latest available full year of public sector contracts in Wales of a character which will make them open to Community-wide bidding as part of the creation of the internal market.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. The assessment could be made only at disproportionate cost.

Forestry Commission Staff

Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were (a) working for and (b) working in the different occupational categories for the Forestry Commission in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of people working for the Forestry Commission in Wales in the different occupational categories are given in the following table:

	1979	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Direct employees
Professional grades	185	165	165	161	160	148
Administrative grades	133	113	120	128	125	117
Industrial grades	1,177	723	689	646	599	522
Contractors[1]	717	587	648	673	679	713
Total	2,212	1,588	1,622	1,608	1563	1,500

[1]Contractors include people working for timber merchants in Forestry Commission woodland.

Home Improvement Grants (Rhondda)

Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount given to Rhondda borough council for home improvement grants in each of the financial years from 1978-79 to the present at 1988 prices; and how many individual grants were given by Rhondda borough council in each year.

Mr. Grist: Provision for capital expenditure on home improvement grants forms part of an authority's overall housing capital allocation. It is for local authorities to decide how their resources are best used to meet the needs of their particular area. Rhondda's total housing allocations since 1978-79 at 1988-89 prices are given in the following table, along with the number of completed grants given by Rhondda district council in each of those years.

	Housing Capital Allocation (at 1988-89 Prices)[1] £000	Number of completed grant given
1978-79	12,961	343
1979-80	12,962	397
1980-81	9,793	417
1981-82	6,223	523
1982-83	7,478	940
1983-84	15,503	3,095
1984-85	9,171	2,999
1985-86	6,953	2,004
1986-87	10,383	1,993
1987-88	11,598	1,498
1988-89[2]	14,463	1,293

[1] Expressed at 1988-89 prices using GDP deflators. Allocations prior to 1981-82 are not comparable with 1981-82 and subsequent years as a new system of local authority finance was introduced in 1981-82.
[2] Housing capital allocations figure is provisional. Number of completed grants given is for April-December 1988.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the estimates of (a) deadweight and (b) displacement with respect to the valleys initiative estimate of 25,000 to 30,000 jobs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many of the new jobs created in the valleys initiative area have been forthcoming from grants made since the initiative was launched;

(3) what proportion of the estimated 25,000 to 30,000 jobs to be created by the valleys initiative will be (i) full-time and (ii) part-time;

(4) what is the estimated full-time equivalent number of jobs to be created by the valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker: I indicated in the document "The Valleys: A Programme for the People" that on past experience Government commitments of regional development grant and regional selective assistance on the scale anticipated for the three years of the valleys programme would be likely to create between 25,000 and 30,000 full-time equivalent jobs. This would involve a large number of projects spread over a wide area and it is not practicable to provide estimates of deadweight and displacement. However, it is not anticipated that the deadweight and displacement elements would be very great.

During the nine months to 31 March 1989 offers of RDG and RSA assistance have been made to 310 projects in the valleys involving the forecast creation of over 7,000 full-time equivalent jobs.

New jobs will also be created with the aid of grants and investment under other headings.

NHS Land and Site Valuations

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of the land and site valuations mentioned in paragraph 2.7 of the health White Paper.

Mr. Grist: Some 888 NHS properties in Wales were valued in 1987 by the office of the chief valuer of the Inland Revenue. The current use value of these properties was estimated at approximately £285 million and the open market value at £219 million.

Economic Policy (Speech)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had on the proposals on general economic policy contained in his speech on 10 April to the Tory Reform Group.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Untreated Milk

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many milk producers in (a) Pembrokeshire and (b) Wales produce untreated milk.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 46
(b) 267

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) males and (b) females were in full-time employment in May 1979 in Wales; how many people are in full-time employment in Wales in the current year; how many part-time (i) males and (ii) females were employed in May 1979 and are in full-time employment in the current year; and how many apprentices there were in May 1979 and how many apprentices there are in the current year.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 10 April 1989]: The only figures available are those derived from quarterly returns to the Department of Employment and from the annual labour force survey of a sample of households in Great Britain, 5,000 of which are in Wales, carried out on behalf of the Department of Employment.

The hon. Gentleman will find estimates of the number of male and female employees in employment, the self-employed and the civilian work force in employment in June 1979 (the closest date to May 1979 for which information is available) in table 9 of the supplement to Welsh Economic Trends, Volume 11.

The breakdown of the estimated number of male and female self-employed in June 1979 is published on page 22 of the Employment Gazette, October 1987, historical supplement No. 2. The latest comparable figures for June 1988 of male and female employees in employment, self-employed, those engaged in work-related Government training schemes and in the civilian work force are published in the Employment Gazette April 1989 page 205.

No information for June 1979 and June 1988 is available on the breakdown between full-time and part-time male employees in employment, but table 9 of the supplement to Welsh Economic Trends volume 11 provides estimates of full and part-time female employees in employment for June 1979. Comparable figures for June 1988 may be obtained from table 1.5 of the Employment Gazette, February 1989—but revised figures are available from the Department of Employment and will be published in table 1.5 of the May 1989 Employment Gazette.

Information from the labour force surveys during the spring of 1979 and 1988 show the number of apprentices in Wales to be 17,000 and 16,000 respectively.

Copies of all the above publications are in the House of Commons Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Poverty

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of his letter to the director of social work of the National Children's Home concerning poverty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The text of the letter is as follows:

"Thank you for sending me your Factfile on children. The document as a whole covers an enormous amount of ground, but I was particularly interested in the point highlighted in your front page on 'dividing the cake'.

In essence, your Factfile invites the unwary reader to freely associate 'poverty' with the pattern of household income distribution. Any suggestion that 'poverty' can be measured by the distribution of the cake without regard for the changing size of that cake must be questioned. Between 1975 and 1985—a period almost identical to the one you quote—average household real incomes and the incomes of the lowest fifth of households both grew by 14 per cent. Indeed, real household incomes grew throughout the distribution. Those who purport to claim that people are getting poorer—when in fact people are getting better off—cannot have got it right.

It is also more than a little fanciful to invite the reader to use the value of Child Benefit as an indication of 'poverty'. Some 70 per cent. of families who stand to gain from an increase in Child Benefit have incomes above average male earnings and what matters to them and most other working families is the real value of take-home pay. It is therefore worth noting that since 1978-79, at all multiples of full-time adult male earnings, real take-home pay has increased by well over a fifth.

I am releasing a copy of this letter to the press tomorrow."

Widows' Pensions

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) why Mrs. Marion Ing of 1 Chilton close, Acklam, Middlesbrough, receives £16·07 per week by way of a widow's pension; and if he will make a statement about Government policy relating to pensions for widows in this position;

(2) why a letter to him dated 3 March about Mrs. Marion Ing of 1 Chilton close, Middlesbrough, has not yet received a reply.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A letter has been sent to my hon. Friend today which explains how Mrs. Ing's widow's pension has been calculated.

Entitlement to widows' benefit for women widowed after 10 April 1988 is determined by the changes introduced at that time. These changes reflected the changing employment patterns amongst widows and have resulted in a scheme which is better targeted and overall more equitable.

Lone Parents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 10 November, Official Report, column 294, what was the total number of lone parents and their dependants in November 1979 and November 1988 (a) dependent on receipt of income support or family income, and (b) the total number of lone parents and their dependants on the same dates, showing in each case, the percentage change since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest date for which all the information requested is available is 1986 and this is reflected in the table. The reference to family income has been understood to mean family income supplement.

	1979	1986	Percentage increase
Supplementary benefit (now Income Support)[1]
Lone parents	318,000	602,000	89
Dependants	558,000	996,000	78
Family income supplement (now Family Credit)[2]
Lone parents	42,000	91,000	117
Dependants	73,000	142,000	95
Total of lone parent families[3]
Lone parents	840,000	1,010,000	20
Dependants	1,400,000	1,600,000	14

Eviction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North on 17 April, what arrangements he proposes to recommend to (a) landlords and (b) claimants to avoid the possibility of eviction resulting from benefit changes introduced on 10 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government believe that landlords will adapt to the new situation by adjusting their charges for board and lodging accommodation so that they are in line with the rest of the market. Claimants will be able to select accommodation in this market, and will no longer have their options constrained by anomalous benefit provisions for people staying in board and lodging accommodation. We have no plans to provide information to claimants beyond that already available from the Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have applied for admission to the United Kingdom as refugees or otherwise seeking asylum, by national origin, in each of the two years subsequent to and prior to the coming into force of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act) 1987; how many and what percentage of applicants were granted admission to the United Kingdom during each such period; and what was their national origin.

Mr. Renton: The Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act) 1987 came into force in March 1987. Information on applications for refugee status, and on grants and other decisions in the years 1985 to 1987, by nationality, is published in the 1986 and 1987 volumes of the annual Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom" (table 6 of bulletin issue 13/87 and tables 6 and 7 of bulletin issue 16/88), copies of which are in the Library. These figures include applications for refugee status made by persons after their admission to the United Kingdom in another capacity, as well as those seeking admission as a refugee. Corresponding information for 1988 is not yet available but will be published in the 1988 volume of this bulletin in the summer of 1989.

These figures do not include South-East Asian refugees who are dealt with under separate arrangements and are granted settlement on their arrival in the United Kingdom. The number granted settlement in the years 1985 to 1988 is published in table 18 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1987" (Cm 415) and table 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 10/89 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1988", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time taken to reach a decision on an application for admission to the United Kingdom as a refugee or otherwise by way of asylum excluding time accounted for by appeals against his decisions in each of the two years prior to and subsequent to the coming into force of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987.

Mr. Renton: The available information is given in the following table. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

Estimated average length of time[1] taken to reach a decision on an application for refugee status in the United Kingdom, for cases decided during the year.
Average time in months

[1] Excluding the time accounted for by an appeal where practicable, although this cannot be done in all cases.

Remand Prisoners

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not yet introduced into East Anglia the same time limits as he has applied in other regions on the length of time defendants may be held in custody while awaiting trial; when he expects to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Custody time limits will be extended on 1 June this year to a further 22 English counties including Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk.

Category A Prisoners (Searches)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of body searches, cell searches and cell changes and strip searches carried out on category A prisoners being held at Winchester police station during September and October 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No category A prisoners were held at Winchester police station during the period in question.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of body searches, cell searches and cell changes and strip searches carried out on each of the category A prisoners being held at Her Majesty's Prison, Durham, monthly since Septembr 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the hon. Member knows, records are not kept of the occasions when rub down seaching or "frisking" is carried out in prisons and it is not the practice to disclose detailed information about security arrangements such as that requested about the frequency of cell searches and cell changes.

Comprehensive records of strip searches are available only in respect of category A women prisoners, of whom there were three in Durham prison between 1 September and 30 October, and four between 31 October and 31 March. The number of occasions on which each was strip searched in each month from September to March is shown in the following table.

	Prisoner A	Prisoner B	Prisoner C	Prisoner D

Passport Applications

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average waiting time for passport applications to be processed at each of the United Kingdom issuing offices.

Mr. Renton: The current processing times for straight-forward non-urgent postal applications at the six United Kingdom passport offices are shown in the table. Urgent applications are given priority, and are not normally subject to delay.

Poppewell Report

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government in respect of each of the recommendations of the Popplewell report.

Mr. John Patten: The action taken relating to the recommendations of the final report of the Popplewell inquiry has been as follows.

Designation under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 has been extended to all sports grounds used for either association football, rugby union, rugby league or cricket and identified as having accommodation for over 10,000 spectators (recommendation 2).

As from 1 January 1988 parts I and II of the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987 abolished the distinction in the 1975 Act between "sports grounds" and "sports stadia" (recommendation 1), introduced a power for local authorities and fire authorities to issue prohibition notes or restriction notices (recommendations 7 and 8), and required local authorities to arrange annual inspections of designated sports grounds (recommendation 9(ii)).

As from 1 January 1989 part III of the 1987 Act introduced a system of safety certification for stands able to accommodate at least 500 spectators under cover at undesignated sports grounds and for their periodical inspection by local authorities (recommendations 3 and 4).

As from 1 June 1988 part IV of the 1987 Act extended entertainment licensing to indoor sports entertainments to which the public are invited as spectators (recommendations 5 and 6).

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 which came into force on 1 January 1986 had already extended the police powers of search and arrest in ways which help them to deal with troublemakers at football grounds (recommendations 11 and 13). The Public Order Act 1986 created a new offence of disorderly conduct to cover hooliganism in football grounds as elsewhere (recommendation 12).

Following a review (recommendation 14) a relaxation of the controls over the sale and possession of alcohol in executive boxes was introduced in the Public Order Act 1986.

The Government's existing proposals for a membership scheme are contained in the Football Spectators Bill [Lords]. This follows previous efforts to encourage the football authorities to introduce membership schemes on a voluntary basis (recommendation 15).

The question of structural fire precautions and means of escape in buildings (including covered sports stands) (recommendation 10) is under review as part of the Government's comprehensive overhaul of the building regulations. It is the intention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to issue a consultative paper by the end of this year seeking comment on a package of proposals dealing with these issues.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government in pursuit of recommendations 34 and 35 of the report from the working group on the green guide on football grounds, published as an adjunct to the Popplewell report.

Mr. John Patten: The guide to safety at sports grounds was revised in 1986. It provides guidance on the function of pitch perimeter fences including the importance of providing gates or access points to allow full access to the playing area (or perimeter track) where it is likely to be used as a place of safety in an emergency.

Hillsborough (Public Order)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has received showing the number of people who were (a) arrested and (b) charged inside or outside the Sheffield Wednesday football ground on Saturday 15 April for (a) drink-related offences, (b) obstruction or assault on police officers, (c) robbery, (d) looting, (e) pilfering and (f) urinating in a public place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chief constable of South Yorkshire police has informed us that 43 persons were arrested of whom 10 were charged, 10 ejected from the ground and 23 were cautioned and released. Of the 43 arrests 19 were for drink-related offences, one for obstructing or assaulting the police, none for robbery, looting or pilfering, and one for urinating in a public place.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has received about how many (a) police officers and (b) emergency service personnel on duty at Hillsborough on Saturday, 15 April required medical treatment because of injuries sustained during their duties on that day.

Mr. John Patten: I am informed by the chief constable that 19 police officers have so far been recorded as having received medical treatment for physical injuries. The chief fire officer informs me that so far none of his staff have reported a need for such treatment and I am informed by the chief ambulance officer that he is still engaged in debriefing his staff and that this information is not yet available. A number of members of the different services are suffering from stress and other problems relating to their experiences at Hillsborough.

Broadcasting White Paper

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations have responded to his White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" November 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I have today placed in the Library a list of the main organisations which have submitted comments on the broadcasting White Paper. We have received over 3,000 responses altogether. Further details may be obtained from the Home Office broadcasting department, room 669, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT.

HEALTH

Operations (Contracting Out)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations within the Trent regional health authority were contracted out to private hospitals, and at what cost, for the year in which he has the latest figures; what was the position five and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 4 April at columns 88-89. The 816 deaths and discharges quoted break down into 21 surgical, 353 convalescent, 441 terminal care and 1 unspecified.

Mental Illness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recently available figures for admission rate (a) for mental illness generally and (b) schizophrenia to mental hospitals, broken down by country of birth.

Mr. Freeman: The figures in the table show the proportion of all such admissions for all mental illness and for schizophrenia only, broken down by place of birth. The information relates to admissions, and not to individual patients, since the same patient may be admitted more than once during the year.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment of the research and development of a monitoring alarm into the prevention of sudden infant death syndrome by Clifton Towers Products Ltd. has been carried out by his Department; and whether Her Majesty's Government will financially support further research and development of this invention.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the work done by Clifton Towers Products Ltd. at Port Talbot into cot deaths; what requests have been made to his Department for the funding of research and development; and what parallel or similar research and development is being carried out with the support of his Department.

Mr. Freeman: Clifton Tower Products Ltd. contacted this Department in April 1988 to say that it had developed a monitor which would help save many babies' lives by triggering an alarm when the baby's temperature rose or fell by 2° from the normal. In subsequent correspondence they said that the alarm would prevent a significant proportion of sudden infant deaths. The evidence for this claim was requested. In September, material on the association between sudden infant death syndrome and temperature was submitted together with a request for unspecified financial support for the development of the alarm. (A subsequent letter requested £120,000 for further research.)

I understand that prior to, and during, this correspondence Clifton Towers was also in discussion with the Welsh Office. The results of these discussions were that, while no assistance was provided for research and development work, assistance was given by the Welsh Office for market research and associated activities under the business improvement services scheme (BIS), and the establishment of a manufacturing facility has been aided under the regional development scheme (RDG).

Officials have taken expert medical advice. The conclusion is that while, as we already knew, there is an association between some sudden infant deaths and temperature, the nature of the relationship is unknown. We are discussing further with the Medical Research Council what is known about the relationship between temperature and infant mortality and morbidity. On the basis of the conclusions of those discussions we will be able to consider the merits of a scientific evaluation of the usefulness and effectiveness of temperature monitors/alarms.

Hospital Trusts

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Calderdale health authority and others on setting up National Health Service hospital trusts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not received any representations from Calderdale health authority. Duncan Nichol, the chief executive of the National Health Service, has asked for initial expressions of interest in the proposals to be sent to my Department through regional health authorities, by 31 May.

Elderly People (Provision)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his Department's guidelines for (a) the provision of geriatric beds, (b) homes for the elderly and (c) home help staff per head of population.

Mr. Mellor: The level of service provision is a matter for the local health authority or local social services authority respectively to decide. Authorities should take into account local needs and where appropriate, the potential contribution of voluntary, private and informal care.

The Department's planning guidelines to health authorities (circular HC (88) 43) state that they should provide an integrated range of services for elderly people, comprising community health services, acute geriatrics/geriatric assessment, rehabilitation and continuing care.

Hearing Therapy Service

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what stage has been reached in the review being undertaken by the National Health Service Training Agency into the hearing therapy service; when he expects the report to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Provision of hearing therapy and employment of hearing therapists in the National Health Service are the responsibility of health authorities. The National Health Service training authority is concerned with the training required for health authorities to achieve the supply of skills they require. In this connection the authority has been reviewing future training provision for hearing therapists and the development of standards-based vocational qualifications. Proposals have been made to the care sector consortium and the Training Agency, and the British Society of Hearing Therapists has been invited to comment.

Capitation Fees

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the possibility of the new standard capitation fees for general practitioners, proposed in "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", leading to general practitioners screening out patients before taking them on in their practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Our intention to increase standard capitation fees is an important part of our proposals for a new contract for GPs. By increasing capitation payments as a proportion of a GP's income we will encourage GPs to recognise the importance of providing full services that will attract patients to their lists and keep them with the practice. In the case of patients aged 75 and over, we will be paying a much higher capitation fee than before. These measures will introduce a degree of competition in general practice which has not existed before and will, we believe, reduce rather than increase the likelihood that GPs will refuse to accept patients onto their lists. If any patient has difficulty in being accepted onto a GP's list the family practitioner committee has and will continue to have the power to assign the patient to a particular GP.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what assumptions on future numbers of (a) surgery sessions, (b) doctors' clinics and (c) general practitioners, his proposals for the introduction of capitation arrangements in "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract" are based.

Mr. Mellor: The examples at appendix F of "General Practice in the National Health Service: A New Contract" are intended to illustrate in broad terms the effect of the proposed new contract on the remuneration of the average GP with a list size of a specified level. The notes on each example explain the assumptions made about the number of minor surgery sessions and health promotion clinics which the average GP with the list size specified in each case might undertake. No assumption has been made about the number of GPs as this does not affect the figures.

General Practice (Targets)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the attainability of the assumptions of 80 per cent. screening of eligible women and 90 per cent. of childhood immunisation set out in "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract" and what account was paid to patient resistance in setting these targets;

(2) what estimate he has made of the potential disincentive effect on general practitioners undertaking screening and childhood immunisation of the levels at which the target take-up rates have been set.

Mr. Mellor: GPs will be required under their terms of service to provide health promotion and illness prevention services. These services will include advising patients on the wisdom of attending for screening and of immunising children. It is Departmental policy to achieve 80 per cent. coverage of women aged 20-65 for cervical cancer screening, and 90 per cent. coverage for immunisation of children under five. These target coverage levels provide a sufficient margin to allow for cases where screening or immunisation would not be appropriate.

We believe that these levels are attainable. In 1987-88 in England childhood immunisation coverage levels were 87 per cent. for polio (with diphtheria and tetanus), 76 per cent. for measles and 71 per cent. for whooping cough with uptake rates for the last two accelerating. Recent initiatives such as the introduction of the MMR vaccine will lead to further improvements. By replacing item of service payments for these services with payments related to achievement of the target coverage levels we will reward the good GPs who already reach those levels and introduce a powerful incentive for those who do not.

GP Contracts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the transitional arrangements to the introduction of the new general practitioner contracts.

Mr. Mellor: No decisions have been made on this matter. Officials are in consultation with the General Medical Services Committee on what transitional arrangements if any will be needed when the new GPs' contract is introduced.

NHS Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how antenatal care will be costed under the new financial arrangements for general practitioners and National Health Service services; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether patients readmitted to hospital will be accounted as new patients in every individual instance for the purposes of financial monitoring under the White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Mellor: The detailed implementation of our proposals for funding hospital services through contracts between health authorities, or general practitioners, and hospitals is currently being considered and discussed with those most closely involved. We plan to issue guidance and model forms of contract by April 1990 as made clear in the second of the working papers published on 20 February.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish (a) a list of those commenting and (b) a summary of the comments of the relevant professional bodies, on the Government's National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 17 April at column 53.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expressions of public support he has received for his proposals on the National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Mellor: We have received many expressions of public support, both at local and national levels, for our proposals for an NHS able to provide more choice and better care for all patients.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the ethnic data for youth training scheme trainees as at March and October 1988 separately for each youth training scheme, both local and large company unit, operating in the Birmingham and Solihull, and Coventry and Warwickshire areas.

Mr. Cope: Because of the exceptional length of the reply, I am sending the hon. Member the information requested, a copy of which has also been placed in the Library.

Training and Work Experience

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish) of 7 November, Official Report, column 51, if he will tabulate the total number of people on each Government training and work experience scheme in (i) 1979 and (ii) the latest date for which figures are available, giving the total of all such persons in each case and the overall cost.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the number of people in Great Britain who started a training or work experience scheme in the years 1979-80 and 1987-88 and the total cost to the Training Agency (formerly Training Commission, formerly Manpower Services Commission). The figures include those who started for a second or subsequent time. Average numbers of trainees in training as quoted in my reply of 7 November are not available for every scheme.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to change the system of reporting and recording of industrial injuries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 came into force on 1 April 1986. They changed and augmented the previous reporting requirements, in particular by extending definition of major injuries and introducing an obligation to report injuries resulting from accidents at work which cause incapacity for more than three days. Although there are no immediate plans for any further change to the reporting and recording system, the operation of the new regulations is being kept under close scrutiny.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he now anticipates that unemployment levels will fall to 1979 levels.

Mr. Lee: The Department does not forecast future levels of unemployment.

Wages (Underpayment)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to reduce the underpayment of wages by employers which are attributed to ignorance or inadvertence.

Mr. Nicholls: Measures designed to inform employers about statutory obligations on minimum pay include the provision of information in employer and business guides, talks and advice given by the wages inspectorate to individuals and groups, and the maintenance of a register of employers in scope of wages councils and to whom wages orders need to be sent. Given the very high level of compliance with wages orders these measures are considered adequate. However, particular efforts have recently been made to ensure that the inspectorate's register is kept up-to-date and there has been increased contact between the inspectorate and organisations which advise the public.

Sherrards Training Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in view of Manpower Services Commission funding what discussions his Department had with the Spastics Society regarding Sherrards training centre, Welwyn Garden City, prior to its closure; and what reasons were given for the closure of this centre.

Mr. Lee: The Training Agency, formerly the Manpower Services Commission, has had a number of detailed discussions over the last 18 months with the Spastics Society covering both funding and the need to improve and modernise the assessment and employer rehabilitation services at Sherrards training centre.

Detailed funding proposals were put to the society in November 1988 offering a continued level of support up to 31 March 1990.

Subsequently in a letter to the Training Agency the society stated that a review of the society's services had been carried out to ensure that the organisation was using its resources in the most effective and efficient means for the benefit of its clients. As a result of the review, the society has decided to close the Sherrards training centre.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is prepared to meet part of the funding of residential costs for training disabled people at Sherrards training centre.

Mr. Lee: The Sherrards training centre closed on 31 March.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will discuss with the relevant local authorities the possibility of joint funding for Sherrards training centre.

Mr. Lee: No. The Training Agency paid up to 90 per cent. of the running costs of the Sherrards centre. The society, however, made it clear that even with a high level of funding it wished to close the centre.

The centre closed on 31 March 1989.

Jobcentres

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to publish his responses to his Department's management report concerning evaluation of the integration pilot schemes between jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 20 March 1989]: Work to test a number of different approaches to integrate employment service local offices and the services they provide began in March 1989. I am currently considering the results of this exercise.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the ethnic monitoring details of YTS trainees for each individual large company unit scheme in the United Kingdom as at October 1989 or the most recent date.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 17 April 1989]: Because of the length of the reply, I am sending the hon. Member the available information, copies of which have also been placed in the Library.

EC Employment Council

129. Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the Spanish Employment Minister, president of the Employment Council of Ministers, at Seville.

Mr. Fowler [holding answer 18 April 1989]: I attended the informal meeting of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers in Seville on 7 March 1989. We had wide-ranging discussions on the social dimension of the single European market.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reimburse in full to Lambeth council the estimated cost of £3 million for preparations for the collection of poll tax to be incurred in the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: No. The Government's grants and capital allocations towards the cost of preparing for the community charge will not necessarily reimburse in full the cost of implementation in each particular authority in view of the freedom available to charging authorities and community charges registration officers to decide what resources to deploy to implement part I of the Local Government Finance Act 1989 in their areas.

The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the decision not to allow the sale of the extract of the community charge register was taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am sending the hon. Member an extract from a speech giving the reasons by my noble Friend the Earl of Caithness in another place on 29 June 1988, during the passage of the Local Government Finance Bill, Official Report, columns 1689-90.

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the responses to the 1989 consultation document on the transition of non-domestic rating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Department is evaluating the results of the consultation. Responses to our proposals are still being received. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that following the introduction of the community charge, private landlords reduce the rents charged to tenants in respect of that element of their rents presently charged on account of the rates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department intends to publish a factsheet on community charge and rents inclusive of rates. This factsheet will be made widely available to landlords and tenants from a variety of sources.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider legislation on other steps to encourage local authorities to request poll tax registration officers to help to improve the level of electoral registration throughout Britain as they contact members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Section 29 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 empowers electoral registration officers to inspect community charges registers. This provision will ensure that the activities of community charges registration officers are of assistance to electoral registration officers in compiling electoral registers.

Quality of Life

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report details of those policies introduced by him since 1983 with the intention of improving the quality of life for the rural community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Rural communities are benefiting along with urban communities from a wide range of policies introduced by the Department.

The farming and rural enterprise package launched in 1987 set out the Government's aims of protecting and enhancing the countryside while also enabling the development of a viable rural economy. These aims are achieved to a large extent through the activities of statutory bodies sponsored by the Department: the Countryside Commission, Nature Conservancy Council and Rural Development Commission.

In the planning field, the Department has given new guidance to encourage diversification of the rural economy, including advice on development involving agricultural land and the need for better standards of layout and landscaping for new housing in rural areas. The General Development Order that came into effect on 5 December 1988 extended specific planning control to proposed new livestock units and related structures such as slurry tanks within 400m of residential and other property.

A number of initiatives have also been taken to help increase the supply of low cost housing in rural areas for all sections of the community. These include:

—enabling the Housing Corporation to establish a special rural programme with a target of 1,100 units a year by 1991-92;

—increased funding for the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust's work in providing start-up support for rural housing associations in smaller villages;

—changes to the planning rules to enable local authorities exceptionally to release small pockets of land, not previously designated for housing, for low cost schemes to meet the needs of local people;

—changes to the rules governing publicly-funded shared ownership which give housing associations a pre-emption right to repurchase the property at market price once the shared owner has moved on.

Certification Officers (Educational Establishments)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made on the designation of certification officers in educational establishments in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: Regulations 4(1) of the Personal Community Charge (Students) Regulations 1989 (SI No. 443) provides that the certification officer as regards an educational establishment shall be the individual having responsibility for registering the enrolment of students to courses of education provided by that establishment. There is no provision and no need for certification officers to be designated.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to ensure that local planning authorities encourage an adequate supply of low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend's reply of 3 February to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) explained the circumstances in which planning authorities may exceptionally wish to release sites not allocated for development in order to secure the provision of low cost housing in rural areas. That statement made clear that the case for releasing additional land for this purpose will be essentially a matter for local judgment. We have also announced a four-fold expansion in the Housing Corporation's funding programme for rural housing association schemes; and tax changes announced in the Budget have removed uncertainties about the position of landowners who wish to make land available for such schemes. Taken together, these changes will, I believe, provide a real stimulus to the supply of low cost housing in rural areas.

Rate Precepts

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a league table of the 10 counties in England with the highest rate precepts from 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is available on page 9 of the report on rates and expenditure of local authorities in England 1989-90, which was placed in the Library of the House earlier this month.

Dogs (Registration)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received in the current year on the matter of dog registration schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the current year a number of letters have been received from hon. Members and others. The RSPCA also arranged for postcards to be sent to us.

Greater Manchester Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Minister for Local Government will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Stretford dated 19 January concerning his response to inquiries concerning the Greater Manchester residuary body.

Mr. Gummer: I will write to the hon. Member.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which accommodation occupied by the Crown Suppliers will be available for sale, distinguishing between freehold and leasehold when invitations to purchase the Crown Suppliers are issued; what is the latest assessment of their market value; and which accommodation he intends to insist must be bought as a condition of sale;

(2) what furniture and furnishing designs owned by the Crown Suppliers will be available for sale when invitations to purchase the Crown Suppliers are issued; and what the total sales of goods manufactured to these designs amounted to in each of the last two years.

Mr. Chope: The detailed contents of the invitation to purchase are being considered.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Wellington house, the headquarters of the Crown Suppliers, is suffering from sick building syndrome.

Mr. Chope: Wellington house is one of a number of buildings which have been the subject of a study by the occupational chest unit of Wythenshawe hospital, Manchester, into the incidence of sickness among staff working in office buildings of different types. The final report and conclusions are awaited.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when listed-building consent was given to the development of Battersea power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Listed building consent for the main scheme was given by Wandsworth borough council in June 1986. Listed building consents for minor works have been given subsequently.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Plants and Seeds

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions the Government have reached about the recommendations in the report on the plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom issued in April 1988.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends and I have examined the recommendations in the light of the views expressed by individuals and organisations. We have decided that work on implementing the majority of the recommendations should now proceed and that a few should be deferred.I am placing a document in the Library of the House giving details of what the Government have decided on each recommendation.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively, and overall in his Ministry are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Ryder: The information on women follows. Ethnic minority figures are based on replies from staff who have completed an ethnic origin questionnaire.

All staff	10,331	7,786	295	3·78

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Ministry last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My Department carried out ethnic origin surveys of all permanent staff-in-post during 1983-87 and all new entrants to my Department are asked to complete ethnic origin questionnaires when they apply for vacancies. We are also doing a follow-up survey of staff who have not provided information on their ethnic origin. For the latest available figures from the surveys I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today in reply to another question.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Ministry.

Mr. Ryder: Recruitment of executive officers, equivalent grades, and above in my Department is normally done by the Civil Service Commission. My Department has assisted in the past with the Commission's campaigns to attract black and Asian applicants at the higher levels, and will continue to do so.

Pig Herds

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average size of pig herd and the total number of herds for the years (a) 1960, (b) 1970, (c) 1980, (d) 1985, (e) 1986, (f) 1987 and (g) 1988.

1988	15,960	6,857,451	430

Note:
The comparison between the 1970 and 1980 figures has been slightly affected by changes in the size threshold which excluded very small holdings from the annual census from 1980 onwards.

Dairy Herds

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average size of dairy herd and the total number of herds for the years (a) 1960, (b) 1970, (c) 1980, (d) 1985, (e) 1986, (f) 1987 and (g) 1988.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the total land area designated as environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Ryder: The total area of land designated as environmentally sensitive areas in the United Kingdom is approximately 790,000 hectares of which 333,000 hectares are in England.

Horses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to introduce the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommended code of practice for horse markets and sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 12 January at column 724.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lebanon

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take to seek to restrain the military action by Syrian forces against the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Twelve have made démarches to both the Syrian and General Aoun and issued a statement on 17 April calling for restraint and a ceasefire. We fully support the efforts of the Arab League to find a negotiated solution and urge all parties to work with the league to that end.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his visit to the United States of America on 16 April, he raised with the United States Secretary of State (a) the first preparatory committee meeting of the 1990 nuclear non-proliferation treaty to be held 1-5 May in New York, and (b) the strategy that the depository states for the non-proliferation treaty could adopt to increase the membership of the treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. However, we take every appropriate opportunity to discuss these issues with the United States. Preparations for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference are frequently discussed at official level.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, at the recent meeting in Spain of the Council of European Community Foreign Affairs Ministers, he raised the matter of the 1990 fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the non-membership of France of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Vietnam

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit of the Minister of State to Vietnam with regard to the returning boat people.

Mr. Waldegrave: During his visit my noble Friend Lord Glenarthur discussed all aspects of the boat people problem, stressing the heavy burden placed on Hong Kong and the urgent need to find a comprehensive and durable solution. He visited some returnees in their homes. All said they were glad to have returned, and that they had been well treated.

Israel

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Israel following the killing by their occupation forces of Palestinian children in Nahalim.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israelis will be fully aware of our views on this tragic incident following the statement by the FCO spokesman on 14 April and our vote in favour of the UN General Assembly resolution on 20 April.

British Citizens Overseas (Imprisonment)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give by reference to a common date the number of British citizens imprisoned abroad, showing the number in each country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: To the best of our knowledge there were 1,190 British citizens detained overseas on 31 December 1988. A breakdown by country is given in the table.

Central America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on (a) the percentage of voters which elected the present Governments of Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, (b) the protection of opposition parties and supporters from military or para-military attacks or repression in these countries and (c) the facilities to meet and campaign enjoyed by such parties; and what regard he has to these factors when formulating his policy towards Central America.

Mr. Waldegrave: The figures available to us are as follows:

(a)

Country	Election Date	Winning Candidate/ Party	Per cent. of votes cast
El Salvador	6 May 1984	José Napoleon Duarte (Christian Democrat)	[1]54·05
Guatemala	5 December 1985	Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo (Christian Democrat)	[1]68·00
Honduras	14 November 1985	Jose Azcona Hoyo (Liberal)	49·23
Nicaragua	4 November 1984	Daniel Ortega Saavedra (Sandinista National Liberation Front)	61·77

[1] Second Round Figures.

In the most recent Presidential election in El Salvador (19 March 1989), Alfredo Cristiani of the National Republican Alliance (ARENA) won on the first round with 54·8 per cent. of the votes cast. He will take office on 1 June.

(b) There were reports of harassment of the opposition in the course of all these elections. The nature of this harassment varied according to the situation in each country. In El Salvador in 1984 a number of Left-wing parties decided that it would not be safe for them to participate. They did however participate in 1989.

(c) Opposition parties have in general enjoyed reasonable freedom to meet and campaign, although according to the Socialist International, in the Nicaraguan elections in 1984 the opposition suffered harassment and censorship of their campaign materials. They were also allotted unequal time on radio and television. Several political parties did not participate because they considered conditions did not exist for a genuinely democratic election.

Support for democracy is one of the guiding principles on which our policy towards Central America is based. We therefore take very careful account of the conduct of elections and the context in which they take place.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Deployment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the deployment of United States Air Force reserve C-130 aircraft to RAF Benson in September 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The temporary deployment of three United States air national guard tactical aircraft units to RAF Benson in September 1988 was designed to give reservist aircrews experience of European flying conditions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the deployment of United States marine corps F/A-18 aircraft to Edinburgh airport in September 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The purpose of the deployment of United States marine corps F/A 18 aircraft to Edinburgh airport during the period 3 to 9 September 1988 was to test the staging facilities for elements of the II United States marine air wing en route to a deployment destination in northern Europe as part of a NATO exercise.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all exercises or deployments involving four or more aircraft of visiting forces for 1988 at bases and facilities, both military and civil, in the United Kingdom, giving the number of aircraft, type of aircraft, the major base or facility used and the dates of the exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be compiled without disproportionate cost and effort.

Imber

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the dangers to members of the armed forces training in the village of Imber and surrounding lands from (i) unexploded ordnance, (ii) metal fragments, (iii) wire entanglements and (iv) open trenches.

Mr. Neubert: Unexploded ordnance, wire entanglements, metal fragments, and open trenches are inherently dangerous. However, since soldiers are trained to recognise and take appropriate steps to deal with such dangers and have support from specialist explosive ordnance disposal teams, I am satisfied that risks to military personnel training in and around Imber village are kept to an acceptable minimum. Indeed there have been no recorded injuries to soldiers training in the area from unexploded ordnance in the last 10 years.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of injuries that have occurred to members of the armed forces training in the village of Imber and surrounding lands for each year since 1979 that are attributable to (i) unexploded ordnance, (ii) metal fragments, (iii) wire entanglements and (iv) open trenches.

Mr. Neubert: There are no records of injuries to members of the armed forces resulting from incidents involving unexploded ordnance whilst training in the village of Imber or the surrounding area in the years since 1979. In respect of the other data requested by the hon. Member, I regret that the information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 3 March, Official Report, column 358, if he will list the legislation subsequent to the Defence Act 1842 that is relevant to the powers under which his Department holds the village of Imber and surrounding lands.

Mr. Neubert: The legislation subsequent to the Defence Act 1842 that is relevant to the power under which MOD holds the village of Imber and the surrounding lands is the Ordnance Board Transfer Act 1855 and the Defence Transfer of Functions Act 1964.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 3 March, (Official Report column 357-58, if he will reconsider his decision not to search relevant records so as to ascertain the number of representations his Department has received regarding the continued use of the village of Imber and surrounding lands by the armed forces.

Mr. Neubert: No, but I stress that those records that are readily available indicate that no recent representations have been received concerning the continued use of Imber by the Army.

Ships (Visits)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (i) the recent visit of HMS Turbulent to Liverpool, (ii) the recent visit of HMS Tireless to Cardiff, and (iii) the recent visit of HMS Churchill to Southampton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These visits were carried out for rest and recreation purposes and to further relations between the Royal Navy and the areas concerned.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all visits by (i) United Kingdom and (ii) non-United Kingdom nuclear powered vessels to non-naval ports that have taken place since June 1987, giving the name of vessel, port visited and dates visited.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines have visited berths in United Kingdom civil ports on the following occasions since June 1987:

Royal Navy ships	Period of visit	Ports visited
HMS Trafalgar	28 September—3 October 1987	Liverpool
HMS Churchill	30 January—4 February 1988	Cardiff
HMS Superb	1 March—6 March 1988	Cardiff
HMS Courageous	2 March—7 March 1988	Liverpool
HMS Tireless	9 March—15 March 1988	Southampton
HMS Torbay	11 May—17 May 1988	Liverpool
HMS Sceptre	4 June—10 June 1988	Liverpool
HMS Trafalgar	12 October—18 October 1988	Cardiff
HMS Turbulent	2 December—12 December 1988	Liverpool
HMS Tireless	25 January—2 February 1989	Cardiff
HMS Churchill	23 February—28 February 1989	Southampton

There were no visits to civil ports by foreign nuclear-powered warships.

Exercise Womble

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (a) how many soldiers were involved in Exercise Womble on Salisbury plain on 31 March, (b) which parts of Salisbury plain were covered by this exercise, (c) how many square miles, or square kilometres, were cleared by this exercise, (d) how many instances of (i) unexploded ordnance, (ii) metal fragments, (iii) wire entanglements or (iv) open trenches were found during this exercise, (e) how many injuries to personnel were recorded during this exercise, (f) how much litter was picked up during this exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Exercise Womble formed part of the annual clean-up of all ranges, training areas and camps within the Army's south-west district area. It involved about 500 men, lasted one day, and covered some 35 square miles of the Salisbury Plain training area. Small amounts of unexploded ordnance were discovered and removed for safe disposal; these were one artillery shell, one demolition charge and three pyrotechnic devices. Eight 4-ton truck loads of metal fragments, iron pickets and the remains of metal targets were removed and 11 open trenches filled in. No serious injuries were reported although a number of soldiers were treated for minor cuts and abrasions. Some 700 plastic dustbin liners filled with a mixture of domestic civilian and military rubbish were recovered along with several discarded refrigerators and other domestic appliances.

Arms Deployment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the levels he envisages for limits on the amounts of arms a country can station in another country under the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation proposals to the conventional forces in Europe talks;

(2) if he will make a statement on the levels he envisages for zonal sublimits on the stationing of certain categories of weapons in specific geographical areas under the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation proposals to the conventional forces in Europe talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to rules 3 and 4 in the proposals submitted by the 16 NATO countries at the opening of the conference on conventional forces in Europe, a copy of which is in the Library.

Harrier (Sales)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed sale of RAF Harrier GR3 aircraft to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Sainsbury: The content of discussions on defence sales matters is confidential.

Cruise Missiles (Boscombe Down)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps were taken to notify parties to the intermediate nuclear forces agreement of the transfer of eight cruise missile launchers from RAF Greenham Common to Boscombe Down airfield between 20 March and 5 April; why they were transferred; how their transfer affects the right to access for on-site inspection under the intermediate nuclear forces agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The INF treaty, which is a bilateral agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union, allows either party to deploy treaty-limited items such as missile launchers within designated deployment areas for unspecified periods of time without the need to notify the other party. This arrangement has, I understand, worked well and given neither party any cause for concern.

As the hon. Member is aware, it is not our practice to comment upon operational details. I can, however, say that the launch vehicles were not transferred directly from RAF Greenham Common to A&AEE Boscombe Down, but spent time there during an off-base deployment which left Greenham Common on 14 March and returned there on 12 April. As this took place within the United Kingdom deployment area, there was no requirement for the United States to inform the Soviet Union, and no such steps were taken.

On-site inspections can only take place at specified locations, which in the United Kingdom are RAF Greenham Common and RAF Molesworth. Whenever an inspection is called, which is always at short notice, it is possible that treaty-limited items will be deployed away from those locations. This is accepted by both parties.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) of 7 March, Official Report, column 738, what category of nuclear disarmament it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to support.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In common with our NATO allies, this Government support arms control agreements, whether nuclear or conventional, which enhance stability and allow Western security to be maintained at lower levels of weapons. For the foreseeable future, the Alliance sees no alternative to its policy of deterrence based on an appropriate mix of adequate and effective nuclear and conventional forces, kept up-to-date where necessary.

Forest Fires

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if, pursuant to his answer of 11 April, he will consider providing the British armed forces with aircraft suitable for fighting forest fires.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Responsibility for fighting forest fires rests with the appropriate civil authorities.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of the computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded;

(2) if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The risk of damage by hackers to MOD computerised files holding classified material is regularly assessed. It is not in the interests of national security to provide details of the current assessment.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; and whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Staff are trained in computer security including hacking and computer viruses. In addition, departmental instructions are circulated on computer security-related issues.

The necessary contingency plans are in place to deal with computer downtime, no matter what the cause.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of its computer files.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD computer security staff continuously review the Department's computer security policy and its application to ensure that constant and adequate levels of protection are provided for those computer systems processing or holding classified material.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Data in transit by electronic means is adequately protected. It is not in the interests of national security to provide details of the measures employed.

USAF Aircraft (Crashes)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the crash of a United States Air Force A-10 Tankbuster jet from RAF Bentwaters at Bank farm, Benwick near Chatteris, Cambridgeshire;

(2) if he will make a statement about each crash in the United Kingdom or its territorial waters of United States Air Force jets in the last year; what risk to life was involved; and what armaments they were carrying.

Mr. Neubert: During the last year, three United States Air Force aircraft have been lost in accidents in the United Kingdom, as follows:

i. 22 December 1988: and A-10 aircraft crashed near St. Ives, Cambridgeshire, during a routine training flight. The pilot successfully ejected.

ii. 4 April 1989: an A-10 aircraft crashed on landing at RAF Alconbury. The pilot was uninjured.

iii. 17 April 1989: and A-10 aircraft crashed during a routine training flight on open farmland one mile south of Benwick, Cambridgeshire. The pilot was killed.

In each case the aircraft was equipped with GAU7 anti-tank guns and practice ammunition. No civilians were injured as a result of any of these accidents.

RAF Aircraft (Crashes)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report all crashes involving RAF Jaguar aircraft since 30 April 1975, showing the date of the crash, the serial number of the aircraft, the unit it was attached to and the fatalities, if any, involved in the crash.

Mr. Neubert: The details of serious accidents involving RAF Jaguar aircraft in which the aircraft sustained irreparable damage are as follows:

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will prohibit RAF low-flying over cliff nesting sites for sea birds on the east coast of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: For flight safety reasons, areas of major bird concentration, including the locations of major seabird breeding colonies in Scotland, are already notified to aircrews who will take account of the potential hazards in the planning and execution of their low flying sorties. It is not therefore generally necessary to impose mandatory restrictions on the overflight of specific cliff nesting sites.

NATINADS Exercise

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what role will be played by RAF Stornoway and Stornoway airport in the United Kingdom NATINADS exercise scheduled for 25 to 27 April;

(2) what role will be played by RAF Benbecula and Benbecula airfield in the United Kingdom NATINADS exercise scheduled for 25 to 27 April.

Mr. Neubert: During the NATO integrated air defence system exercise MAULSTICK, which is planned to be held between 25 and 27 April, the radar facilities at RAF Benbecula will be tested by a small number of aircraft operating some miles away from the island. RAF Stornoway will not be involved.

Defence Export Services

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Mr. Alan Thomas will be taking over from Sir Colin Chandler as head of Defence Export Services; and what are the terms of the appointment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Alan Thomas will start taking over from Sir Colin Chandler as Head of Defence Export Services in early July. He will assume total responsibility for the post in September.

Mr. Thomas was appointed at a salary of £100,000 a year subject to annual review. He will also be eligible for a performance bonus.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Manaus Conference

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the results of the Manaus conference, sponsored by the Royal Geographical Society, on Amazonia, at which he was represented.

Mr. Chris Patten: At the Manaus conference a five volume economic survey compiled by Dr. Ratter of the Royal Botanic Garden, Edinburgh was handed over. Forty-six scientific papers were read (in Portuguese) and useful discussions on future work were held. The Brazilian authorities expressed satisfaction with the level of expertise and the degree of United Kingdom/Brazilian co-operation. A series of reports will be prepared for Acta Amazonia, the major Brazilian journal of the National Institute of Amazon Research in Manaus. The Overseas Development Administration expects shortly a written report from the Royal Geographical Society.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a member of his Department to visit the Maraca project, Brazil.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council gave him on 18 April, at column 183. We are in discussion with the Brazilian authorities on what further assistance may be given for rain forest work in Brazil. If a visit by an Overseas Development Administration team is agreed it will present an opportunity for the team leader to visit the Maraca project.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten), the Minister for Overseas Development, has to pay a visit to Brazil.

Mr. Chris Patten: Dependent on other commitments, I hope to visit Brazil later this year.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for the forest regeneration team to return for two months to Maraca ecological reserve, Brazil.

Mr. Chris Patten: The forest regeneration team are returning to Maraca for two months under the project work plan funded by the Overseas Development Administration as soon as their visas have been authorised.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds Her Majesty's Government are providing to study the Alexa tree at the western end of Maraca, Brazil, for its potential in providing the plant alkaloid castanospermine; and what interim results are available from the clinical tests at St. Mary's hospital, London, with a view to providing a treatment for certain forms of the disease AIDS.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration support for research in the Maraca forests has been concerned with their management and regeneration and not specifically with the Alexa tree. However we are aware of the great potential importance of the Alexa species for biochemical extractives. If the Brazilian authorities request support for collaborative research on the Alexa tree this will be considered sympathetically and could be looked at during the proposed ODA team visit to Brazil.

I understand laboratory studies involving synthetic castanospermine are in progress but I have no knowledge of clinical trials at St. Mary's hospital, London. The hon. Member may wish to approach the medical authorities about this.

Central America

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the level of British bilateral aid to each of the states in Central America for each year from 1979 onwards in (a) current and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures for Central America and Mexico are as follows. The figures include investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation but do not take account of joint funding provided to non-governmental organisations.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing in ranked order the per capita contributions made by Economic Co-operation and Development member states to Nicaragua for the latest year for which figures are available, including the total aid given by each Economic Co-operation and Development country for that year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Note: Figures relate to member states of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the OECD. No figures are available for non-DAC OECD members.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total emergency assistance given to Nicaragua in response to Hurricane Joan.

Mr. Chris Patten: Including our contribution through the European Community, the total emergency assistance given to Nicaragua by the United Kingdom in response to Hurricane Joan was £413,000.

Aid Policy

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what special allocations within grants for overseas aid will be made to ensure that women figure more highly in development projects, especially primary health care and education.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our grant aid finances activities which benefit both women and men. We do not make special allocations for either but we aim to design projects to meet women's special needs and problems wherever an opportunity arises.

Improvements in primary health care and education are central to promoting conditions which allow women to play their full part in development. Our recent booklet "Women, Development and the British Aid Programme", copies of which are in the Library, explains how we are helping in these fields.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chemicals and Fertilisers

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the possibilities of declaring an amnesty for those farm chemicals and fertilisers currently the subject of banning orders.

Mr. Ryder: No representations have been made for an amnesty in respect of fertilisers since none of these are banned. There have however been a number of representations that an amnesty should be declared so as to permit the disposal of holdings of unapproved pesticide concentrates. In each instance it has been explained that no such amnesty is warranted, since those who can demonstrate that they have taken responsible steps towards achieving disposal—that is, by at least having made arrangements with a reputable specialist waste disposal contractor—need not fear that they will be penalised for illegal stockholding. Whenever the degree of risk permits, withdrawal of approval is phased so as to allow existing stocks to be used up.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 11 April, Official Report, column 440, whether he intends his Department to finance the additional research necessary on the tuberculosis vaccine for badgers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I intend my Department to contribute towards funding the further research referred to in my earlier reply.

Potatoes

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East on 2 February, Official Report, columns 399-400, whether he intends to update regularly the statistics relating to the use of tecnazene on potatoes.

Mr. Ryder: Yes. Pesticide usage surveys are undertaken at regular intervals and the results are published.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East on 2 February, Official Report, columns 399-400, whether he now has further details of the use of tecnazene on the 1988 potato crop throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: Details of the use of pesticides, including tecnazene, on the 1988 potato crop are still being collected. These figures will cover pesticide usage in England and Wales. Results available from the 1986 crop in Scotland were given in my answer to the hon. Member on 2 February at columns 399-400. Pesticide usage statistics are not collected for Northern Ireland.

Cereals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, Official Report, 13 April, column 689, what was the total tonnage and average price per tonne of all cereals imported into the United Kingdom in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Ryder: The following is the information:

	[1]Quantity (tonnes)	[2]Average price (£/tonne)
1986	3,517,365	142·05
1987	3,520,873	133·28
1988	3,370,401	134·05

[1] Quantities rounded to the nearest whole tonne.
[2] Average prices have been calculated from import values on a cost, insurance, freight basis.

ADAS

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been employed in the farm and countryside service of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The number of people employed in the farm and countryside service of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in the years requested is as follows:

	Number
1987	1,903
1988	1,774
1989	1,785

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of man years spent by his advisers working in Agricultural Development Advisory Service for each of the last three years on the following: (a) free advice, (b) extensification work and (c) chargeable advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: This information is in principle included in "Ministerial Information in MAFF" available in the Library of the House. However, publications to date have not distinguished between inputs to free and chargeable advice. It is anticipated such a distinction will be made in the 1989 version and the provisional figures for 1988-89 are 125 man years for free advice and 1,148 man years for chargeable advice. These figures exclude the activities of members of the State Veterinary Service who are not normally classified as "advisers".

An extensification scheme has not yet been introduced in the United Kingdom. Some ADAS manpower has been involved in advising policy makers on the preparation of a scheme, but it is not included in the figures and cannot be identified separately.

Milk

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the use of penicillinase in milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have no evidence of such use, which would be an offence under section 2 of the Food Act 1984.

Mr Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his intentions with regard to the sale of green-top milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 23 February at columns 712-13.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on (a) the number of boardings of fishing vessels carried out by each European Community member state, (b) the proportion of such boardings which were of vessels registered in that country and (c) the number and outcome of prosecutions following such boardings over the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that information on boardings of fishing vessels carried out by other member states and the number and outcome of prosecutions following such boardings is not available to me.

Food Labelling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when Her Majesty's Government initially pledged themselves to introduce new laws to improve food labelling; when that proposed legislation is expected to be introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: We have for a number of years been following a policy of moving away from strict compositional standards for food (recipe law) which restrict consumer choice towards an improved system of food labelling, to ensure that consumers are given adequate information of food labels and are able to make an informed choice. European Community policy is also following the same course.

As part of the Community's food law harmonisation programme, amendments to the Community food labelling directive, are expected to be adopted by the Council very shortly, following which these will need to be implemented into United Kingdom law.

The main changes for the United Kingdom are on datemarking of foods. Proposals on nutrition labelling are also under discussion in Brussels. These aim to standardise the presentation of nutrition information so that it is easier for consumers to compare products and to achieve a balanced diet. Other proposals for improved food labelling are also expected to be tabled in the run up to 1992.

Reprocessed Meat

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will examine the use of mechanically reprocessed meat in pies and sausages and request that all products using such material shall be clearly labelled.

Mr. Ryder: Mechanically recovered meat is used in a number of meat products including pies and sausages. The Food Labelling Regulations 1984 require that a treatment given to a food or food ingredient should be indicated in the appropriate place on the label if the omission of such an indication would mislead the purchaser.

Sea Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made with the French to limit their fishing of sea bass in the Channel.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I announced on July 27 last year at column 298-99 a series of new steps for the conservation of bass fisheries, involving an increased minimum landing size, mesh size restrictions and plans for the establishment of a series of nursery areas to give protection to juvenile bass. The measures do not involve proposals for quantitative restrictions on the adult bass fishery in the Channel. There is no evidence at present to support the need for such restrictions though we shall continue, however, to keep that fishery under review.

Rural Housing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has had any discussions with interested parties on the provision of low-cost housing in rural areas.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales are, of course, responsible for policy on this matter in England and Wales, respectively. However, rural housing is an issue which is often raised with me in the context of agriculture and countryside matters. I therefore welcome warmly the statement made by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 3 February 1989 at columns 433-34 about new guidance to planning authorities in England, which is intended to increase the provision of low cost housing in rural areas.

I hope that following the announcement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on the tax position of land sold to housing associations for this purpose, landowners will be encouraged to make suitable land available. An adequate supply of affordable housing to meet the needs of those who live and work in the countryside is an important element in the Government's policies for the diversification of the rural economy.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, Official Report, 10 April, column 362, he will make a statement on his policy in relation to ensuring where possible that tropical timber is obtained from sustainable sources, in relation to sea defences and other such projects.

Mr. Ryder: The source from which timber is obtained cannot be the sole criterion in judging the merits of sea defence and similar projects. Nevertheless, where possible my Department would welcome proposals which utilise timber from sustainable sources.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 19 April at column 175.

Fishing (Aid)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the amount of Economic European Community financial support made available to the fishing industry of Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, and Spain for each of the last available five years and the division of such support between catching, processing and port and market facilities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information held centrally is as follows. I shall write to the hon. Member about the other information as soon as possible.

(Mainly) EAGGF Financial Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give his estimate of the extent of national aid for fishing in the latest available year in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland and Spain in each of the following areas (a) construction support, (b) lay-up subsidy, (c) social security support when not working, (d) fuel subsidy, (e) support for processing industry, (f) financial support for fishermen's organisations and (g) provision of port or market facilities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not centrally available. But some indication of the national aids given by these member states is contained in the 1986 OECD publication "Review of Fisheries".

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms have taken the option of the set-aside scheme for agricultural land; what proportion of total agricultural land this represents; and if he will give similar figures for the other countries in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 21 April 1989]: The information so far available is as follows:

	Number of farms	Hectares set aside	Percentage of arable land[1] in member state
Belgium	39	383	0·1
France	210	2,409	Less than 0·1
Germany	25,289	170,635	2·4
Ireland	97	1,918	0·2
Netherlands	98	1,222	0·1
Spain	180	6,202	Less than 0·1
United Kingdom	1,820	57,613	1·2

[1]May in member states other than the United Kingdom include some land not eligible for the scheme.

HEALTH

Medical Ethics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on medical ethics in practice and protection for patients against unscrupulous operators.

Mr. Mellor: It is for the medical profession itself, and in particular the General Medical Council, to lay down ethical guidance for doctors taking into account changing attitudes in society, and to ensure that it is followed. Such guidance applies equally to private practice as to practice in the NHS.

Listeriosis

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to make listeriosis a notifiable disease.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is currently reviewing the list of notifiable diseases and, as part of this review, will consider whether listeriosis should be made notifiable.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the need to make listeriosis a notifiable disease.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Student Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many student midwives who started before April 1988 are on grades D, E and F; and how many who started after April 1988 are on grades D, E and F.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Denture Replacements

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has recently had with regional health authorities to ensure that denture replacements are made available to patients in hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities will be well aware that if in-patients lose or break their dentures, arrangements should be made for the hospital dental service to supply a replacement as soon as possible.

Toxocariasis

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been reported each year since 1979 of persons suffering from toxocariasis.

Mr. Freeman: The information available on human toxocara infection is limited. The communicable disease surveillance centre receives around one hundred reports of laboratory identifications each year; however, the true incidence of infection is unknown.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) Trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no instances detected and no unsuccessful attempts recorded.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in view of evidence from the United States of America and France, that personal health records are being maliciously damaged by the implantation of computer viruses, what precautions are being taken against similar breaches of United Kingdom public health and medical records held on computer files.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the policy of the Department of publicise the measures taken to ensure the security of medical data since such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no recorded cases of unauthorised access.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of its computer files.

Mr. Freeman: The Department regularly reviews its computer security arrangements, but it would not be appropriate to publish details of procedures and arrangements.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mr. Freeman: Computer systems containing sensitive information are subject to physical and local security measures designed to remove or minimise the risk of damage, including that by hacking, to that information. The Department does not consider it sensible to publish details of risks and counter-measures involved.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and what plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mr. Freeman: Staff are briefed on a wide range of security risks and counter measures including those by hacking and viruses. Security contingency plans include provision for potential computer downtime caused by unauthorised access. These arrangements vary according to the level of sensitivity of the information held. The Department considers that the effectiveness of these arrangements would be reduced if details were made public.

Data Protection

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means.

Mr. Freeman: Electronic transmission of data is subject to physical and logical security measures appropriate to the level of sensitivity of the data transmitted. The Department does not consider it sensible to publish details of the security measures taken.

AIDS

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scientific evidence was considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicines before it gave its approval for a licence to the drug AZT for the treatment of AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: The Committee on Safety of Medicines considered a range of scientific matters relating to the safety, quality and efficacy of this drug. The information supplied by a pharmaceutical company to support a licensing application is commercially confidential.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence there is on the reversibility of the side effects of the drug AZT and on the effect on the AIDS virus if the drug is discontinued;

(2) what are the known side effects on AIDS patients of the drug AZT.

Mr. Mellor: Zidovudine (AZT) has been associated with a range of side effects as set out in the ABPI Data Sheet Compendium 1988-89 (pages 1634-6). A copy is in the Library. Many patients do develop side effects due to the potency of this drug and the seriousness of their illness. Doctors are advised to monitor patients very carefully and adjust the dosage or even stop the drug altogether should side effects occur. Reversibility of side effects depends upon their nature and severity and upon the clinical state of the patient. Little information is available about the effects of discontinuing treatment on the AIDS virus, however there have been reports of a rise in the blood levels of the viral antigen.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths are known to have resulted from the use of the drug AZT.

Mr. Mellor: None that we are aware of. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has received three adverse reaction reports where patients being treated with Zidovudine (AZT) have died. Unfortunately all of these patients had a limited life expectancy due to the nature of their illnesses, and it is not possible to establish that any of these deaths resulted from the use of this drug.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence there is of the efficacy of the drug AZT (a) in prolonging the lives and (b) in improving the quality of life, of British AIDS patients who have been treated with it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I am advised that evidence for the efficacy of the drug Zidovudine (AZT) when used in the treatment of patients in the United Kingdom was published in January 1989 in volume 18, supplement 1 of the Journal of Infection.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many AIDS patients have been treated with the drug AZT; and how many are currently receiving it.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital consultants held (a) full-time contracts and (b) part-time contracts with the National Health Service in: (i) 1979 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers in England in 1979 and 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, were as follows:

	1979	1987
Full-time contracts	5,080	6,774
Part-time contracts	7,281	7,740

The number with part-time contracts includes university staff who have an honorary contract with a health authority.

District Health Authorities (Assets)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of assets disposed of by each district health authority during 1987-88; and what was the total value of those assets.

Mr. Freeman: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained withour incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all district health authorities which operate a computerised call/recall cervical cytology programme for all women aged 20 to 65 years at three-yearly intervals.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 16 February at column 345.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list all those district health authorities which have not yet called all women aged 20 to 65 years for a cervical cancer smear;

(2) if he will list the uptake of women called for a cervical cancer smear for each district health authority; and if he will list those district health authorities which are unable to provide these statistics.

Mr. Freeman: HC(88)1 stated that all women aged between 20 and 64 years should be invited for a cervical smear test within five years of implementation of computerised call and recall systems, unless their GP has indicated that they should be excluded. We are not, therefore, expecting all district health authorities to have completed this task until March 1993—five years from when their computerised systems became operational. Information on the number of eligible women screened for cervical cancer is expected to become available later this year when we receive health authorities' returns from Körner form KC53—"Adult screening programmes—cervical cytology".

A copy of HC(88)1 is available in the Library.

Spectacle Allowance (VDUs)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost to public funds for the current financial year of the spectacle allowance payable to staff in his Department who work on visual display units; what is the current allowance; and when it was last updated.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated 1989-90 cost of spectacles for staff in the Department working on VDUs is £10,000. The current allowance, updated on 1 December 1988, is £50 plus any eyesight testing costs.

Prescriptions

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to ensure that each prescription for medicine is accompanied by an information pamphlet describing the relevant drug's indications, side effects and withdrawal symptoms.

Mr. Mellor: No, but other measures to improve communication to patients about medicines are in progress.

At present there is no requirement on pharmaceutical companies to provide leaflets with medicines, but the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) encourages its members to do so. Under the Medicines (Leaflets) Regulations, such leaflets, if supplied, must specify contraindications, warnings, and precautions, and may specify indications for use.

The Council of Ministers of the European Community (EC) has reached a common position on a proposal to amend pharmaceutical directives which would, amongst other things, introduce a requirement to provide leaflets with medicines. It is expected that this directive will be adopted shortly.

Further, the EC Commission is following up a resolution of the Health Council of May 1987 requiring a report and, if appropriate, proposals for further measures to improve patient information leaflets. We understand the aim is to report to the Council by the end of the year. We shall consider constructively the Commission's report, when available.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to ensure that a health warning is given on all bottles of benzodiazepines prescribed to patients, to the effect that those medicines can cause dependence.

Mr. Mellor: I have no present plans to do so. The space available on medicines labels is limited. Leaflets offer greater scope for developing communication to patients about medicines.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds were allocated by his Department in 1987 to assist people dependent on benzodiazepines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987-88 the following grants were made under the central drugs initiative to services specifically for those dependent on benzodiazepines:

Mind (Copeland)—tranquilliser withdrawal scheme £33,541

North East Council on Addictions—tranquilliser advice and support scheme £40,662

Grants totalling £4,038,962 were also made to 97 other projects in 1987-88 under this initiative, some of which provided a service for those dependent on benzodiazepines. In addition the Government made available £6 million to regional health authorities specifically for the development of services for those experiencing problems with illicit or prescribed drugs.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the approximate cost to the National Health Service of the prescriptions issued for benzodiazepines by community pharmacists in 1987.

Mr. Mellor: We estimate that the approximate cost to the NHS of prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in 1987 was £30·2 million.

Drug Usage

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spent in 1987 on giving advice on drug usage to general practitioners and hospital doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In the financial year 1987-88 almost £2 million was spent by the Department on giving advice on drug usage to professional staff working in the NHS. This expenditure is not broken down by professional group. In addition, health authorities provide their own drug information services. It is not possible to separate the cost of such services from the total pharmaceutical services provided by health authorities.

"Health for Year 2000"

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instruction he has given to the Health Education Authority on its work on, "Health for all by the Year 2000"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The World Health Organisation's "Health For All By The Year 2000" strategy is one of the considerations that all health authorities, including the Health Education Authority, take into account in developing their programmes of work.

Health Education Authority (Community Participation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instruction he has given to the Health Education Authority on its work on community participation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A number of specific action tasks were agreed at the ministerial accountability review of the Health Education Authority on 20 February. One of these was that the authority prepare, by the end of April, a report on the concept of community development and the way in which it might be taken forward in keeping with the authority's health education remit.

Meningitis

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount of financial support given to the meningitis trust for the purposes of research into meningitis and meningococal meningitis in 1980 and 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The trust did not exist in 1980 an has not recently applied to this Department for research funding. However, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 21 December by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science at column 292, which listed research projects into meningitis supported by the Medical Research Council.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce organisational reforms in order to separate more clearly the Department's sponsorship role with regard to the pharmaceutical industry from its regulatory role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The two functions are handled by separate parts of the Department. Since 1 April the regulatory role of medicines licensing has become the responsibility of the Medicines Control Agency, so that the two functions are now more widely separated.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement outlining the cost savings to his Department realised through the introduction of the limited list prescribing systems; and if he will indicate the precise manner in which that figure has been calculated.

Mr. Mellor: In 1985-86 the selected list scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill. The savings in each of the seven therapeutic groups were:

	£ million
Cough and cold remedies	22
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	19
Indigestion remedies	8
Vitamins	7½
Laxatives	2
Bitters and tonics	1
Benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers	15½

These savings were calculated by comparing actual expenditure in 1985-86 with an estimate of the expenditure which would have been incurred in that year if the scheme had not been introduced.

It is not possible to make meaningful estimates for savings in subsequent years but we have no reason to doubt that significant savings continue to be made.

SCOTLAND

Geriatric Patients

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has issued to health boards on the rate of provision of beds for geriatric patients and hospital places for psychogeriatric patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Guidance on services for the elderly and the elderly with dementia was set out in the SHARPEN (Scottish health authorities' review of priorities for the eighties and nineties) report, which was published, and commended to health boards, in November 1988. The report contained guidance about bed provision; it also stressed the need for a range of facilities, and for appropriate placement.

Police Rent Allowance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form details for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available of the total pay bill, compensatory grant received and income tax paid by each police authority in Scotland in respect of police officers' rent allowance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not held centrally in the detailed form requested, but the table shows the total sums paid by each police authority in the 1987-88 financial year by way of rent allowance and compensatory grant.

Police Authority	£
Central	1,278,493
Dumfries and Galloway	686,740
Fife	1,415,990
Grampian	2,396,359
Lothian and Borders	4,253,725
Northern	910,187
Strathclyde	17,982,163
Tayside	2,605,438
Total	31,529,095

This expenditure attracted 51 per cent. specific police grant.

Communications (Interceptions)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information was available to him when he decided not to call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde region on the illegal interceptions of communications in Helensburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sufficient information on which to make a decision.

NHS (Capital Charges)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from what date capital charges in the National Health Service will be charged in full; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As indicated in paragraph 4.1 of the Scottish working paper 5 "Capital Charging", published last month, it is proposed that capital charging will start to operate in Scotland from April 1991.

Highland Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, what were those matters of common interest discussed at the meeting with Highland health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not normal practice to disclose the nature of informal discussions between Ministers and health boards.

Toxocariasis

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have been reported in Scotland each year since 1979 of persons suffering from toxocariasis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Toxocariasis is not a notifiable disease and this information is not held centrally. Between 1979 and 1987, six cases were admitted for in-patient care in Scotland.

Dog Fouling

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals for legislation with regard to dog fouling to enable local authorities and police to take action against irresponsible behaviour on the part of dog owners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is already an offence under section 48 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 for a person in charge of a dog to allow it to foul any of the places specified in that section. The Act is under review, and proposals for improvements in its provisions will shortly be the subject of consultation.

Community Charge

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East of 17 April, if he will make it his policy to collect from community charge registration officers in Scotland information on the uses made of electoral registers in compiling the community charge registers which they are currently operating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of making arrangements to collect information on the use made by community charge registration officers of electoral registers, or other sources of information to which they may have access, in connection with their functions.

Inward Investment

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all inward investment projects in Scotland in 1988 and 1989 to date.

Mr. Lang: Details of all individuals projects are not published as certain information is supplied by companies on a commercially confidential basis.

The figures based on company plans for inward investment in Scotland where there has been direct involvement by officials of Locate in Scotland or the Industry Department for Scotland are as follows:

	Numbers of projects	Planned investment £ million	Planned jobs
1987-88	84	324·2	11,219
1988-89	55	437·6	7,089

Locate in Scotland is aware of a further four projects which came to Scotland in 1987-88 without officials involvement and of a further five in 1988-89.

Locate in Scotland

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current staff establishment of Locate in Scotland; what offices are currently overseas; and what additional offices are planned.

Mr. Lang: The current staff establishment of Locate in Scotland is 60, of which 25 are based in field offices outwith Scotland. Overseas offices are located as follows:

Brussels 1; Tokyo 1; London 1; United States of America 4 located in Stamford, San Mateo, Houston and Chicago.

At present there are no plans to open additional offices elsewhere.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital consultants held (a) full-time contracts and (b) part-time contracts with the National Health Service in Scotland in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is shown in the table.

Hospital consultants in the NHS in Scotland

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of assets disposed of by each health board during 1987-88; and what was the total value of those assets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Income from the sale of surplus NHS land and properties amounted to £7·948 million in 1987-88, when the following properties were sold:

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all those health boards which have not yet called all women aged 20 to 65 years for a cervical cancer smear;

(2) if he will list the uptake of women called for a cervical cancer smear for each health board; and if he will list those health boards which are unable to provide these statistics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards have been asked to ensure that all women in the age range 20 to 60 in Scotland receive a cervical smear test by 1993. Information on the number of eligible women screened for cervical cancer will be collected from January 1990.

Cornton Vale Prison

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total average number per day during 1988 of females in Cornton Vale prison engaged in (a) work, (b) daytime education and (c) evening education; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During 1988 the total average number per day of females engaged in those activities at Cornton Vale was as follows:

	Number
Work	123
Daytime education	39
Evening education	17

Attendance by inmates at daytime education is on a part-time basis. Evening education is available only between the months of January to March and September to December.

Alar

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the crops on which the chemical Alar is used and the purposes for its use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Pesticide usage surveys indicate that there has been a very small use of Alar in Scotland in recent years, on chrysanthemums in 1981 and on seed potatoes in 1987 as a growth regulator. The continued use of this chemical is being considered by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and its views are awaited.

Sewage (Dumping)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the life cycle in salt water of sewage dumped (a) in the firth of Clyde and (b) of the west coast of Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the health implications for fishermen fishing in the waters of the firth of Clyde of the dumping of sewage waste.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The only site in the firth of Clyde at which sewage sludge may be dumped under the terms of section 5 of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 is situated off Garroch head. Sewage sludge is an inert organic material which, through time, is dispersed by the natural action of the sea.

The Garroch head site is monitored annually by Strathclyde regional council and biennially by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland to assess the impact of sea disposal operations on the marine environment. There is no evidence to suggest that the site presents any hazard to the health of the public in general or to fishermen in particlar.

Sand Eels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vessels landed sand eels from Shetland waters in 1988 (a) before and (b) after 30 June; and how many of these vessels were under 50 ft registered length in each of these periods.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	before 30 June	after 30 June
all vessels	6	4
under 50 ft	2	2

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations to be consulted by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland over the proposed licensing arrangements for sand eel stocks by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on 4 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Copies of the consultation paper have been given to Government Departments, fishing industry organisations, other organisations which have expressed an interest and have been made freely available to any individual or organisation requesting a copy.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Fund

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available on the terms of consultation with each social security office regarding the social fund budget for 1989-90; and whether there were any discussions with given offices about their particular patterns of allocations.

Mr. Needham: Social fund allocations for 1989-90 were made according to an objective formula and there were no consultations with individual offices. As explained in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on 23 March at columns 739-42 I placed a note in the Library on 23 March setting out the basis on which the allocations were made.

Anglo-Irish Conference

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland upon what policy aspects of extradition and extra territoral jurisdiction further work is to be carried out by the Anglo-Irish conference, as referred to in paragraph 5 of the communiqué of the 5 April meeting of the Anglo-Irish conference.

Mr. Tom King: As provided by article 8 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, the conference is concerned with policy aspects of extradition and extraterritorial jurisdiction as between North and South. A wide range of issues concerning the law and procedure on these matters is kept under review, to try to ensure effective procedures for dealing with the problem of fugitive offenders. Such issues include the provision for arrest and detention, the arrangements for the transfer of prisoners where extradition is ordered, and the procedural and other requirements which must be satisfied before extradition can be ordered. It would not, however, be appropriate to comment in detail on the substance of these discussions.

Loyalist Parades

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, in the report of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary for 1988 the figure of 1,865 loyalist parades includes youth organisation, church and other similar events; and what criteria the Chief Constable has used to define loyalist parades.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 19 April 1989]: This is a matter for the Chief Constable. I am advised that the figure of 1,865 does not incude parades organised by youth organisations, Churches and other similar organisations. However I understand that the categorisation of a parade as "Loyalist" is dependent upon the description of the event on the notice of intention to march given by the parade organisers.

Fair Employment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate how much public funds has been spent directly and indirectly in the United States of America and the United Kingdom on lobbying and information activity against the MacBride principles; and if he will place in the Library copies of any transcripts or evidence submitted by Government officials, representatives and members of the Fair Employment Agency to state legislatures in the United States of America.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 April 1989]: The explanation of Government policy and achievements in the field of fair employment in Northern Ireland is one a range of closely related tasks shared among the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including diplomatic posts overseas. It would be disproportionately expensive to seek to isolate the staffing and related costs of this specific aspect of their activities. However, from June 1985 until 31 March 1989 the overall costs of employing lobbyists and of assistance to individuals to give evidence was £375,579.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place copies in the Library of each decision of the High Court in Northern Ireland arising out of section 42 of the Fair Employment act 1976 relating to the current litigation concerning Tinnelly and Co. Ltd. v NIE.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 April 1989]: It is not normal practice to place High Court judgments in the Library, but they may be obtained on request from the Appeals and Lists Office, Royal Courts of Justice, Chichester street, Belfast 1.

PRIME MINISTER

Missile Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will make it her policy publicly to repudiate allegations made in overseas courts about negotiations between Her Majesty's Government and other countries relating to the export of missiles to third parties against the declared policy of Her Majesty's Government;

(2) whether she will now make it her policy to answer questions about the supply of Blowpipe surface-to-air missiles where there are permissions given to forward them to countries other than those named on the end-user certificates; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. We do not reveal communications between Governments.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received about communications received since 1984 from the United States President or any official of the United States Administration to facilitate the supply of (a) Blowpipe surface-to-air missiles and (b) other armaments to Nicaraguan Contras; what was her reponse; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. we do not reveal communications between Governments.

Nicaragua

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will now make it her policy to reveal what was contained in the representations received in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and in the current year in connection with the Nicaraguan Contras from the United States special envoy Mr. Lyle Cox or other United states representatives; if she will explain the purpose of these communications and her response; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. We do not reveal communications between Governments.

Government Advertising

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what conveniently available figures she has giving total Central Government spending on all forms of advertising in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Information on publicity, including advertising, is not held centrally except where the expenditure incurred was through the Central Office of Information.

Details of departmental expenditure on publicity, including advertising, for the financial years 1979-80 to 1988-89 were supplied by Ministers in response to questions from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and published in the Official Report in November-December 1986, July 1987, December 1987-January 1988 and March 1989.

Information Officers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response she proposes to make to the IPCS draft code of ethics, in respect of the proposals to strengthen the neutrality of Government information officers.

The Prime Minister: I have no seen the document to which the hon. Member refers, and have not been asked to respond to it. The duties and responsibilities of civil servants, including information staff, are set out in Sir Robert Armstrong's note of December 1987 and there are long-standing conventions on Government publicity. I do not believe that any separate code of ethics is required.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent disciplinary action has been taken against Government information officers in relation to their activities as trade union members; and for what reasons.

The Prime Minister: Disciplinary action with regard to individual civil servants is a matter for Departments. Information on such cases is not held centrally.

Director of Public Affairs (Scotland Yard)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister why the chief press secretary at No. 10 Downing street provided a shortlist of civil servants to the Metropolitan Police Commissioner for the position of director of public affairs at Scotland Yard; and which official was previously responsible for supplying such information to the police.

The Prime Minister: The chief press secretary, as head of the Government Information Service, was asked to advise on a replacement for the director of public affairs at Scotland Yard by the Metropolitan Police Commissioner. A similar procedure operated when the head of the Government Information Service was director-general, Central Office of Information.

Chief Press Secretary

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she takes to ensure that her chief press secretary is not involved in matters of a party political nature; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My chief press secretary is well aware of his duties and responsibilities as a civil servant.

Civil Servants

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the civil servants who have been subject to recent disciplining for having refused to undertake activities which they considered to be of a party political nature.

The Prime Minister: No. Any such action is a matter for the Department concerned.

Mr. Charles Powell

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when Mr. Charles Powell will be leaving her private office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Powell will serve in my office until it is time for him to leave.

WALES

Waste Disposal

Mr. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those operations for which sea disposal licences for the deposit or incineration of waste at sea have been granted under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to her on 18 April by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

NHS Staff

Mr. Allan Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many tutors and other staff were employed in the training and education of nurses in Wales in 1979, 1985 and in each subsequent year;

(2) how many people were employed in the training and education of nurses in Wales (a) by occupation category, and (b) by specialist category in 1979, 1985 and in each subsequent year;

(3) how many people were working in (a) National Health Service hospitals and (b) the National Health Service in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year;

(4) how many people were working in different occupational categories within (a) the National Health Service, and (b) the different occupational categories within hospitals in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year;

(5) how many people were being trained and educated (a) for a nursing career, and (b) in the different categories for a nursing career in Wales in 1979, 1985 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is available in tables 3.01 to 3.14 of issues of "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", copies of which are in the Library of the House. In particular, information for various nursing and midwifery staff grades may be found in table 3.10, although the more detailed figures published prior to the 1987 edition should be treated with caution since they are based on NHS payroll occupational codings of limited quality.

Rating Reform

Mr. Ted Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of additional staff required for the administration of the poll tax in each rating district.

Mr. Grist: Each district council in Wales will need to decide for itself on the number of staff to be employed in the administration of the community charge in its area in the light of its own individual circumstances.

Language Teaching

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new steps he will take to encourage the teaching of European languages, and in particular German, in Welsh schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Education Reform Act prescribes that a modern foreign language will be one of the foundation subjects to be studied by all pupils aged 11 to 16. This will begin to come into effect in autumn 1990 when all pupils in the third key stage (that is aged 11 to 14) will be required to be taught a modern foreign language for a reasonable time. The Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales have proposed that all the official languages of the European Community, including German, should be recognised for this purpose. In the meantime a working group is to be set up by July 1989 to advise the Secretaries of State on attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages with a view to beginning to implement these in schools from autumn 1992.

Home Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West of 10 April, Official Report column 396-97, if he will identify the legislation that gives Welsh local authorities a statutory duty to enforce home safety legislation.

Mr. Grist: The Home Safety Act 1961.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital consultants hold (a) full-time contracts and (b) part-time contracts with the National Health Service in Wales in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1988.

Mr. Grist: Information for 1979 and for 1987 (the latest year available) is as follows:

Number of consultants[1]	1979	1987
holding full-time contracts	391	532
holding part-time contracts[2]	307	328

[1] As at 30 September.
[2] Includes consultants holding part-time, maximum part-time and honorary contracts.

Health Authority Assets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of assets disposed of by each health authority during 1987-88; and what was the total value of those assets.

Mr. Grist: Details of all assets disposed of are not held centrally. Information about land and building disposals is available and is summarised in the following table. The total value of those assets was £1,671,000.

District health authority	Property details

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all health authorities which operate a computerised call/recall cervical cytology programme for all women aged 20 to 65 years at three-yearly intervals.

Mr. Grist: I understand that Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan health authorities currently operate a computerised cervical cytology programme for all women aged 20 to 64 with a three-yearly recall period. All other health authorities have adopted a five-yearly recall interval. Government advice is that priority should be given to offering a first smear to all women within the target age group rather than reducing the screening interval at this stage. Nevertheless, the recommended recall frequency is being kept under careful review.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those health authorities which have not yet called all women aged 20 to 65 years for a cervical cancer smear.

Mr. Grist: Since February 1987, when the Welsh Office sought to extend the existing cervical cytology screening programme in Wales to include younger women, all Welsh health authorities have implemented programmes to enable all eligible women to be offered a first smear from the age of 20, unless their GP has indicated that they should be excluded. As yet no authority has fully achieved this aim—although it is expected that some will do so this year.

The Department will be monitoring the progress of all DHAs towards this objective.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the uptake of women called for a cervical cancer smear for each health authority; and if he will list those health authorities which are unable to provide these statistics.

Mr. Grist: The administrative arrangements in use for running the cervical screening call and recall service in Wales have not permitted take-up ratios to be calculated with confidence. A new computer package which will provide such information has now been provided for all family practitioner committees' computers. Information on take-up rates will be forthcoming once the new system has acquired an adequate data base.

Vehicle Purchases

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many vehicles and at what value were purchased by (a) his Department, (b) the Welsh Development Agency and (c) other public sector agencies for which he is responsible, in 1988; and how many of these vehicles were British-made within the definition of British as set out by the Department of Trade and Industry in its arrangement on content with the European Community.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The information is as follows:

(a) Three; £20,703. These vehicles were United Kingdom produced on the definition employed by the Department of Trade and Industry for statistical purposes, under which a vehicle is classified as United Kingdom produced if the United Kingdom content exceeds 50 per cent. of the ex-works value.

(b) None.

(c) The purchase of vehicles by public sector agencies is a matter for those agencies and information is not held centrally. However, the following limited information is available; the definition of United Kingdom produced vehicles given under (a) applies:

Agency	Number and origin	Value £
Development Board for Rural Wales	One United Kingdom	19,835
Land authority for Wales	One non United Kingdom	16,000
Area Health Authorities Welsh Health Common Services Authority	Not known	1,546,302
Family Practitioner Services	One United Kingdom	7,000
Sports Council for Wales	[1]19	129,323

[1] These vehicles manufactured by a multi-national company could be United Kingdom or EC produced. This could be determined only by individual inspection of the vehicles.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will have (a) a Wales regional office in Cardiff, (b) a Wales development office in North Wales and (c) five Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution members serving in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) where, and how many, inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are based in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give the details of the proposed reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in England and Wales, indicating where the main office which will serve Wales will be located; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 21 April 1989]: Proposals are being developed for the reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in England and Wales in order to integrate its responsibilities for air pollution control, radioactive substances, water pollution and other wastes on a regionalised basis. Three regions are proposed to cover the north, south-east and south-west: Wales will come within the south-west region. The existing air district offices will be retained as outstations for the time being. There will continue to be a permanent office in Cardiff.

Six Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inspectors are based in Wales. In addition, three of the inspectors in the Chester office spend part of their time inspecting premises in north Wales. Consultations with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment are in progress on detailed working arrangements for Wales, including the deployment of inspecting staff.

Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the large factories in Wales which must receive regular visits from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution because of their capacity to generate severe pollution problems; and if he will indicate the distances Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution must travel from existing offices to such factories;

(2) if he will list the principal factories in Wales which generate either severe or medium pollution problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 21 April 1989]: All premises which dispose of radioactive waste are required to be authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Authorised premises in Wales are listed in the list of premises in England and Wales currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. A total of 181 premises are registered under the Alkali &c. Works Regulation Act 1906 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Details are listed in the public register of works, which is available for inspection at Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution offices in Cardiff and Chester or at the Department of the Environment, 2 Marsham street, London.

Factories are visited by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inspectors as necessary. Information on distances which inspectors travel to each factory could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Widows' Benefits

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in detail the present position on widows' benefits, showing the ages and family circumstances which bring the various benefits into operation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following is the present position on widows' benefits and takes into account my right hon. Friend's decision announced on 28 February 1989 at columns 161-62.

Widows' benefits for women widowed before 11 April 1988

Widowed mothers' allowance—followed widows' allowance where the widow has a child for whom child benefit is payable. Child dependency increases paid for each child. This is paid in addition to child benefit.

Widowed mothers' allowance (personal)—followed widowed mother's allowance for widows where the youngest child is under 19 and has left school but remains at home and child benefit is not payable.

Widows' pension—followed widows' allowance if widowed over 40 and childless or on cessation of widowed mothers' allowance. Amount determined by age at relevant time, minimum rate payable at 40 and full rate at 50.

Widows' benefits for women widowed after 10 April 1988

Widows' payment—tax-free lump sum of £1,000 payable on bereavement if widowed under 60 or husband not retired.

Widowed mothers' allowance—paid from widowhood if the widow has a qualifying child. Child dependency increases paid for each child. This is paid in addition to child benefit.

Widows' pension—paid from widowhood if widowed over 45 and childless or, if over 45, when widowed mothers' allowance ceases. Amount determined by age at relevant time, minimum rate payable at 45 and full rate at 55.

Note: The foregoing does not give details of the contribution conditions that must be satisfied before payment.

Family Incomes and Tax Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, 20 February, Official Report, column 481, what is the net income after the Budget proposals have come into effect (i) after housing costs of a married man with children aged 13 to 16 years earning (a) £104 and (b) £105 per week, (ii) of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years paying average rent and rates as used in the tax benefit model tables earning

(a) £65 per week and (b) £80 per week, (iii) after benefits of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £60 per week gross and (b) £140 per week gross, (iv) under current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged three, eight and 11 years with gross earnings of (a) £65 per week and (b) £105 per week and (v) under the current tax and benefit structure of a married man with children aged four and six years earning (a) £80 per week and (b) £90 per week;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) of 27 February, Official Report, column 27, how many people earn less than the respective point at which the tax benefit withdrawal level falls to 34 per cent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

I shall let my hon. Friend have such information as can be obtained as soon as possible.

Customer Service and Efficiency

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the monitoring of customer service and efficiency in Department of Social Security offices in the north-west.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the monitoring of customer service and efficiency in Department of Social Security offices in Strathclyde.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In all Department of Social Security local offices, major areas of local office activity, including throughput of claims and payment accuracy, are monitored on a monthly basis against pre-set targets. Their scope has recently been extended from 50 per cent. to 70 per cent. of all local office activity. In 1988-89 all local offices began monitoring the quality of their service in areas such as caller times, correspondence and interviews, as well as sampling customer opinion of the service they provide.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the likely implications for the transmission by Channel 4 of public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality".

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 16 March at columns 304-5. I am not aware that the arrangements will be any different for Channel 4.

Spectacles

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vouchers are outstanding for dispatch to patients awaiting part payment for spectacles; and how many patients have been waiting (i) less than one month, (ii) one to two months, (iii) two to three months and (iv) more than three months, for their vouchers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: National Health Service spectacle vouchers must be issued by the optician immediately following a sight test and are valid for a period of six months. Patients claiming help with the cost of spectacles under the NHS low income scheme must have a valid certificate of entitlement from the agency benefit unit for use, with the voucher, when purchasing the spectacles. Claims under the low income scheme cover exemption from, or help towards, a wide range of NHS costs and it is not possible to identify those claims which have been prompted by a need for spectacles. On 11 April 1989 a total of 41,300 new claims under the low income scheme were awaiting processing at the agency benefits unit: this represents 11 days' work. The stockpile of cases involving non-dependants which had accumulated at the unit have now all been cleared. Further information, in the form requested, is not available.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) Trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded;

(2) if, in the light of his Department's computerisation, he will place in the Library a copy of the advice issued by his Department to the staff of regional and local social security officers on the threat of computer hacking;

(3) if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files;

(4) what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means;

(5) if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of its computer files;

(6) if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department;

(7) whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and what plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 15 December 1988 at columns 693-4.

In addition the following points may be of interest.

The Department's policy is to keep the security of its computer systems under continuous review to ensure the integrity, availability and confidentiality of these data and that the requirements of the Data Protection Act are met.

The Department takes advice from the appropriate Government authorities on security matters. In the case of sensitive data held on computers or transmitted by electronic means this includes the IT security and privacy group of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. This advice is incorporated in the Department's formal computer security standards, which apply to all its computer systems. These standards include requirements for risk assessment, countermeasures, incident investigation and contingency planning. Staff who use computers are given appropriate security instruction. In the interests of security it would not be sensible to publish details of the security standards and procedures or of the training given in their use.

It is not the Government's policy to publish details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure. Such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Benefits

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how may social security beneficiaries are paid (a) weekly in cash at post offices, (b) four-weekly by bank giro credit and (c) three-monthly by bank giro credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The main benefits for which the option of payment by automated credit transfer is available are retirement pension and child benefit. The latest figures available are:

	Number
Retirement pension
(a) Order book	6,730,961
(b) Four weekly ACT	1,461,891
(c) 13 weekly ACT	69,396
Child benefit
(a) Order book—weekly	3,466,604
—four weekly	2,195,481
(b) Four weekly ACT	1,051,290
(c) 13 weekly ACT is not available

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of paying social security beneficiaries paid four-weekly by bank giro credit in the middle of the four-week period rather than at the end of it.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There would be additional benefit costs, estimated at £177 million, in the first year due to the advancing of payments and a continuing cost due to loss of interest to the national insurance fund and consolidated fund, which based on current case loads and average payments and assuming an interest rate of 10 per cent. per annum would be about £18 million per year.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what administrative savings arise from paying social security beneficiaries by bank giro credit rather than in cash at post offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Based on current case loads and costs the administrative savings are estimated to be of the order of £25 million a year.

Earnings Rule

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the abolition of the pensioner earnings rule will affect women (a) below the age of 60 years and (b) aged 60 to 65 years who are drawing category B pensions, through the contributions of their husbands.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The position for these women from 1 October 1989 is as follows:

(a) Where a married woman below the age of 60 years is concerned, if her husband has reached age 65 and claimed category A retirement pension, he will continue to be entitled to the dependent adult's addition to his retirement pension in respect of his wife. The earnings rule of £34·70 a week attached to this addition will continue to apply.

(b) As now, a woman whose husband has deferred taking his retirement pension will not be able to claim her category B retirement pension. However, a married woman aged 60 to 65 years who can claim a category B retirement pension based on her husband's contribution record will not be subject to an earnings rule on her pension.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present prison officer staffing level at Wandsworth prison; what was the level set out in the Brisco report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of officers in post at Wandsworth prison on 17 April and the staffing levels recommended in the report of the regional manpower team to which the hon. Member refers are as follows:

	Recommended	In post 17 April
Discipline staff
officers	302	302
principal and senior officers	57	44
Specialist staff
officers	78	72
principal and senior officers	28	19

There is likely to be some increase in the number of staff in post at Wandsworth as more officers are recruited to the service over the next few months.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed prison officer staffing levels with the Governor of Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Staffing levels are discussed in the normal course between governors and regional management. Staffing at Wandsworth was also discussed by the governor and senior prison service officials during the industrial dispute earlier this year.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether extra prison officers were allocated to Wandsworth prison on 1 April under the national agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Staff required for 1989-90 under the terms of the fresh start framework agreement were recruited nationally before 1 April. The allocation to individual establishments is made on the basis of an assessment by management of their relative need. Wandsworth is likely to see some increase in the number of staff in post in the coming months.

Mr. Mark John Stone (Passport)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will examine the circumstances arising from the allegations made by Mr. S. N. Stone of St. John's close, Rugeley, Staffordshire in his letter of 22 March to the Head of Administration, Passport Office, India Buildings, Water street, Liverpool; and when Mr. Mark John Stone of the same address will receive his passport.

Mr. Renton: The Liverpool passport office replied on 3 April to the points raised in Mr. Stone's letter. The passport was posted to him on 10 April. A refund will be made in respect of the additional costs he incurred in obtaining a British visitor's passport while waiting for his son's standard passport application to be processed.

Foreign Citizens (Imprisonment)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, against each country of which they are a national, the number of foreign citizens presently imprisoned in the United Kingdom, setting out against each (i) the nature of the offence, (ii) the sentence imposed and (iii) the remaining term of imprisonment left to serve.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information about individual foreign citizens could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The readily available information is given in the following two tables. The recording of nationality for citizens of Commonwealth countries, Pakistan and the Irish Republic is not always reliable. The remaining term of imprisonment left to serve varies between individuals according to sentence length, date of reception into a Prison Service establishment, whether parole licence is granted and for how long, and whether full remission of sentence was earned; the readily available information gives the average remaining term for the sentence length group assuming full remission but without making allowance for parole.

Parking Enforcement

98. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now received the report of the working party on parking enforcement.

Mr. Hurd: The working party on parking enforcement has now submitted its report, which I am considering.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether prepetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded;

(2) if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 228, if he can quantify the assessed risk of damage to sensitive computerised files;

(4) what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means;

(5) if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be in the interests of computer security to disclose such information.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of his Department's policy on reviews of the security of its computer files.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to her question on 15 March, at column 228.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; and whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As appropriate, staff are trained in such matters. Contingency plans exist where necessary, but their effectiveness would be reduced if details were made public.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the use of the public telephone network of the United Kingdom as a means of distributing obscene and offensive material in the form of computer bulletin boards accessible to any person using a home computer with a telephone; and if he will make a statement on his proposals to bring such practice to an end.

Mr. Renton: We have received some such representations. Computer bulletin boards are technically non-licensable cable programme services under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984, and the general provisions of the Act concerning obscenity, defamation and incitement to racial hatred apply to them. We are considering, in the context of the follow up to our recent White Paper on broadcasting, whether any further regulation is required.

Detective Sergeant Kenneth Morgan

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the years during which Detective Sergeant Kenneth Morgan worked with former Chief Superintendent Kenneth Etheridge.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that former Chief Superintendent Etheridge served with the Metropolitan police company fraud squad from 1971 until 1977 when he retired from the force. Detective Sergeant Morgan joined the squad in 1974 and remained there until 1978. I understand, however, that throughout the three years during which the two men served with the squad they were not involved on the same work.

Her Majesty's Prison, Leeds

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the prison department report into the conditions of young prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Leeds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 10 April, at column 325.

Firearms

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that police forces in England and Wales make use of application forms for the grant of a shotgun certificate which have been amended to comply with the provisions of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988;

(2) whether he will advise police forces in England and Wales not to make use of application forms for the grant of a shotgun licence which are not in accordance with the provisions of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The new controls on shotguns, prescribed in the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, will come into force this summer. An amended form of application for the grant of a shotgun certificate will be prescribed in revised firearms rules which will come into force at the same time. In the meantime, the existing form of application prescribed in the Firearms Rules 1969 must continue to be used.

Football Match (Hillsborough)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what level the publication of statements on 18 April by South Yorkshire police concerning the conduct of Liverpool fans at the Hillsborough semi-cup final was authorised; if he will publish a copy of that statement and the name of the officer who made it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statements made by officers of the South Yorkshire police are a matter for the chief constable. It would not be helpful for me to publish statements or counter-statements which have been made about the circumstances leading to the tragedy, or to name those who made them. It is for Lord Justice Taylor's inquiry to establish the facts.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made for every person involved in or affected by the Hillsborough tragedy who wishes to complain about police strategies, tactics, behaviour or practice at or appertaining to that event to be heard at Lord Justice Taylor's inquiry; if he will take steps to ensure that any such complainant will be able to make their complaint formally and officially; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is for the inquiry to determine the arrangements for hearing evidence which it considers will help establish the causes of the tragedy.

Statutory provision exists under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for complaints by members of the public against the police to be dealt with thoroughly.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands force on whether any representations from the public appertaining to police activity and strategy at the Hillsborough tragedy will be admissible to the police inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Anyone who has information which he believes could help the inquiry should make this available to the chief constable of the West Midlands police without delay.

Football Matches (Safety)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory provision is made for the availability of oxygen and respiration equipment at football league and cup fixtures; what requirement there is to provide a contingency plan in the event of an emergency; how often safety arrangements are required to be reviewed; and who is responsible for enforcing such regulations.

Mr. John Patten: The Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 requires the operator of a sports ground designated under the Act to apply for a safety certificate from the local authority. Safety certificates, which are issued under the 1975 Act, contain terms and conditions which are necessary or expedient to secure reasonable safety at the ground in question when it is in use. They may include requirements for contingency planning, training and safety reviews.

The terms and conditions of a safety certificate and their enforcement are the responsibility of the issuing local authority.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received about assaults on police officers and emergency service personnel on duty at Hillsborough on Saturday 15 April.

Mr. John Patten: I am informed by the chief constable that information about any assaults on police officers has not yet been collated. The chief fire officer informs me that so far none of his staff has reported any assault. The chief ambulance officer reports that, so far, three staff have reported an assault but that the debriefing of his staff is not yet complete.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of South Yorkshire as to what arrangements are being made to return items belonging to deceased Hillsborough victims to their relatives.

Mr. Hurd: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police, who is conducting the police inquiry into the Hillsborough tragedy, that the items, which it is thought may play an important part in the investigation, are being held temporarily. The police are conscious of the need to return these personal items as quickly as possible to the relatives of the deceased and are proceeding urgently with the investigation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Relocation

99. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received about locating civil servants out of London to the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Brooke: I have not received any such representations. However, Government Departments are now undertaking the serious and substantial relocation reviews referred to in the answer that I gave on 9 February 1989, at columns 751-2, to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran); these reviews are directed towards finding sites which offer advantages in terms of the recruitment and retention of staff, value for money and operational efficiency. Decisions will be announced by departmental Ministers once the essential parts of the review process have been completed.

Government Advertisements

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those Government advertisements in the last three years to which the Independent Broadcasting Authority has objected or to which the authority has sought changes; and if he will make a statement about each such occasion.

Mr. Lilley: All Government advertisements comply with the requirements and procedures of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent increases in petrol prices following upon his decisions in the Budget.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made it clear in his Budget speech that he expected the full decrease in the duty on unleaded petrol to be passed on to the consumer. The evidence suggests that the new differential between unleaded and leaded petrol has been fully reflected in pump prices.

Computers

113. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made any estimate of cost of providing free of charge a computer for every household in the United Kingdom linked to a national fibre-optic cable network.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 20 April 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The costs involved would depend inter alia on the type of computer. There are some 18 million households connected to the national telecommunications networks.

PA Consulting Group in its report "Evolution of the United Kingdom Communications Infrastructure" estimated that a national fibre-optic grid, artificially advanced, would cost an additional £21 billion over 20 years. Computers can, however, be linked up whether or not the networks are fibre-optic.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee on Sound Broadcasting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if the will take steps to reconstitute the Select Committee on Sound Broadcasting.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no plans to do so at present.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what advice the Health and Safety Executive has offered arising from its recent visit to the House.

Mr Wakeham: None.

Ten-minute Bills

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council in what month he expects to bring forward proposals on the system of queuing for ten-minute rule Bills.

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot say at present.

Fire Drills

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed answering on behalf of the House of Commons Commission (1) on what dates fire drills have been held in the House since 1979;

(2) what procedures are followed in the House's fire drills;

(3) when a fire drill last took place in which (a) hon. and right hon. Members, (b) staff and (c) hon. and right hon. Members and staff were evacuated from the House.

Mr. Beith: Since 1979 fire exercises have been held as follows:

16 December 1980	House of Commons
17 September 1981	Underground Car Park
22 July 1982	Norman Shaw North
4 August 1982	Underground Car Park
25 April 1983	House of Commons
10 April 1984	3 Dean's Yard
11 December 1984	House of Commons
20 May 1985	St. Stephen's House
27 November 1985	Norman Shaw South
1 July 1986	2 The Abbey Garden
3 June 1987	St.Stephen's House
3 December 1987	House of Commons Zone 4
7 October 1988	House of Commons Zone 7
8 December 1988	Norman Shaw North
7 January 1989	7 Old Palace Yard
16 February 1989	3 Dean's Yard

The normal procedure is for the fire alarm to be activated and for all occupants of the premises, including both Members and staff, to evacuate the zone or building to a predetermined assembly point. These exercises are supervised by the fire officer and the London fire brigade has participated on a number of occasions. Plans to increase the frequency of fire exercises are already in hand.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will take steps to ensure that all industrial injuries to staff of the House are in future recorded and readily available.

Mr. Beith: Yes. At present information on those accidents which have been referred to DSS and classified as industrial injuries is held in individual staff personal files. In future, records of industrial injuries will be separately recorded by the Establishments Office and maintained in a central file.

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what hazardous chemicals are used in the House of Commons; and what training is given to staff to deal with emergencies.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

A wide variety of potentially hazardous chemicals are currently in use by the parliamentary works office ranging from proprietary brands of correction fluid used by typists and descaling agents required for the central heating boilers. All are safe when used in accordance with the accompanying manufacturer's instructions and in accordance with the Hazchem code of markings.

Job-related training is provided where necessary.

An assessment is currently being made of any action which will be necessary to comply with the new Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH) 1988, which, for the most part, come into force on 1 October 1989.

ENERGY

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has none of these printers, nor does it have any contracts for their use.

Oil Production

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the loss of production caused by the damage to Cormorant Alpha will require a review of the advice he gives the Ministry of Defence on the merchant shipping tanker requirements for the United Kingdom in the event of war or national emergency.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Energy gave on 14 February 1989 to his earlier question, at column 113.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) Trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded;

(2) if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files.

Mr. Forth: It is not the policy of this Department to make public details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure, since such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he gives regular advice to the financial sector on how to guard against unauthorised penetration of their computer files by hackers;

(2) whether his Department issues advice to business about computer security;

(3) whether he gives regular advice to the financial sector on how to guard against unauthorised penetration of its computer files by hackers.

Mr. Forth: The DTI seeks to promote the development and application of standards addressing computer security, and criteria for the security evaluation of IT products, and to raise the awareness of the importance of computer security measures in business operations. Indivdual businesses should be addressing questions of computer security peculiar to them, as part of good business practice.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the use of bulletin boards for the transmission of private numbers, thereby enabling computer hackers to transfer charges to other people's accounts; and if he will make a statement on the measures he proposes to take to eliminate this activity.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of any such representations.

The misuse of computers, and the use of bulletin boards by "hackers", are among the issues being considered by the Law Commission following the publication of its working paper on computer misuse. Its recommendations are expected before the end of the year.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mr. Forth: The Department takes advice from the appropriate Government authorities when addressing the security risks to its computer systems.

In the case of sensitive but unclassified data, the Department can assess the risk of damage by hackers by using the CCTA's risk analysis and management methodology (CRAMM).

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means;

(2) if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of its computer files.

Mr. Forth: It is not the Department's policy to make public details of computer security procedures or measures. In addressing the security requirement for computer systems, advice is taken from the appropriate Government authorities.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and what plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mr. Forth: Staff in the Department are briefed on computer security issues. Procedures exist for recovering from incidents resulting in downtime of the Department's computer systems. It is not the Department's policy to reveal details of recovery plans for sensitive systems.

Soaps and Commodities

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that soaps containing mercury are not offered for sale to the public and that cosmetic preparations do not contain more than two per cent. hydroquinone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Cosmetics Products (Safety) Regulations 1984 (Statutory Instrument 1984 No. 1260) prohibits the use of mercury in soaps and limits the presence of hydroquinone in cosmetic products to 2 per cent. Regulations banning the use of mercury an limiting the presence of hydroquinone were first made in 1978 and continue to be in force.

The enforcement of these regulations is a matter for local authority trading standards departments.

Hazardous Wastes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he has taken to encourage the chemical and hazardous waste-producing industries to give more attention to changes in their production processes to enable reduction or recycling of waste.

Mr. Forth: My Department maintains very close links with the chemical industry through its trade association and by direct contact with individual companies. It is encouraging voluntary action by industry in the sphere of waste management which includes recycling and waste minimisation. I was pleased to note that the Chemical Industries Association introduced recently a programme of responsible care related to the environment which will be adopted by its member companies. This includes a code of practice and guidance on monitoring.

ENVIRONMENT

Air Conditioning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Government buildings are fitted with the wet-air cooling air conditioning systems; what action is being carried out to have them replaced by a different type of air conditioning system; what review he is instituting on the installation of this type of air conditioning in new buildings; what consideration is being given to requiring a different type of air conditioning system to be fitted in buildings where these are already installed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: With regard to those buildings designed and/or maintained by PSA, it has been, and continues to be, the general policy that air conditioning should be installed only where there is no practical alternative. For new construction, the policy is to install dry cooling systems—where practicable—in those buildings where air conditioning is necessary.

For existing buildings with evaporative heat rejection equipment (wet air cooling) a strict water hygiene treatment regime is applied, involving regular inspections and a complete review of the water treatment regime at least once a year, backed up by independent audits to monitor the effectiveness of the regimes and establish where improvements can be made.

In those leased Government buildings where the landlord is responsible for maintenance, PSA estate surveyors ask landlords to give written assurances that they have or will introduce similar practices.

PSA does not hold a central record of the number of Government buildings with wet air cooling systems. The highest concentration of such systems is in London, where there are currently 151.

Wet air cooling systems will normally be maintained in accordance with the strict regime explained above to the end of their economically useful life. The opportunity will then be taken to consider alternative arrangements utilising dry cooling principles wherever practicable.

Public Service Broadcasts

Mr Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will assess the likely implications for the transmission by Channel 4 of public service broadcasts emanating from his Department of the White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90s; Competition, Choice and Quality".

Mr. Ridley: There is no reason to suppose that the proposals in the White Paper will alter the present arrangements whereby public service messages are broadcast by Channel 4.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Ridley: My Department does not use any Siemens ND3 printers either in-house or through a private contractor.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each of the Crown Suppliers' product supply, transport and buying agency businesses, in each of the three years before Civil Service departments were untied and in each year since (i) total sales, (ii) sales to Civil Service departments, (iii) sales to British Telecom, (iv) sales to British Rail and (v) average price rises in each year over that period.

Mr. Chope: The Crown Suppliers will not be operating as three separate businesses until 1 January 1990. The current information and accounting systems do not enable the business, particularly for product supply and the buying agency to be accurately identified. In addition, the sales figures shown include sales generated from activities which do not form part of the package for sale and which have been transferred to PSA during the last three months. The level of the Crown Suppliers' sales will, therefore, be markedly different in the future.

The following analysis has been split on the best estimate available for those functions to be included in each of the three businesses. Government Departments were fully untied from the Crown Suppliers on 1 April 1987.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to honour the commitment given to this House by his junior Minister that the pensions of the staff of the Crown Suppliers upon privatisation will be comparable to those they are entitled to under the principal Civil Service pension scheme.

Mr. Chope: When tender invitations are issued, prospective purchasers will be invited to offer pension terms to transferred staff broadly comparable to those in the principal Civil Service pension scheme. Detailed future pension arrangements will be a matter for the purchaser to discuss with the Government in the course of the sale.

Drinking Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will place in the Library the reasoned opinion received from the European Commission concerning compliance with the European Community drinking water directive;

(2) at what date he anticipates that United Kingdom drinking water will comply with the requirements of the European Commission directive (80/778/EEC) on the quality of drinking water;

(3) when he intends to respond to the European Commission's reasoned opinion on the failure of the United Kingdom to apply correctly the European Commission directive (80/778/EEC) on the quality of drinking water;

(4) when he intends to provide the European Commission with a timetable of compliance with the European Commission directive (80/778/EEC) on the quality of drinking water;

(5) whether the programme, timetable and cost of compliance with the European Commission directive (80/778/EEC) on drinking water will be included in the prospectus of each water authority prior to flotation;

(6) what will be the cost of compliance with the European Commission directive (80/778/EEC) on the quality of drinking water;

(7) when he intends to provide the European Commission with a costed programme of compliance with the European Council Directive (80/778/EEC) on the quality of drinking water.

Mr. Ridley: Both the European Commission and the Government regard the detailed, formal correspondence on infraction proceedings as confidential. The deposit in the Library of the recent reasoned opinion would be a breach of that confidentiality.

A formal response will be made shortly to the European Commission's reasoned opinion, which refers to the absence of United Kingdom legislation directly applying the EC drinking water directive and the fact that some supplies do not yet comply with the nitrate standard in England and the lead standard in Scotland.

The Water Bill and the regulations to be made under it will incorporate the provisions of the directive directly into domestic law. The Commission accepts that such legislation will enable them to close this part of the reasoned opinion.

Public water supplies to the United Kingdom are at present of a very high standard and most supplies already comply with the EC directive. We are fully committed to compliance with the EC directive as soon as practicable. Those supplies which regularly fail to meet a standard are being improved and should comply in the next year or two. However, two years after the directive came into force, and five years after we had notified the Commission that we were assessing compliance on an average sample basis, it informed us that every single sample had to comply. This has necessitated the preparation of detailed compliance programmes by water undertakers to meet the new interpretation, mostly for standards related to the taste and appearance of the water. These programmes are still being assessed and it is not therefore possible at present to state how long it will take to comply fully with the EC directive. However, discussions are taking place with the Commission about the time scale of the programmes and the technical difficulties involved.

The United Kingdom has already submitted to the Commission for its consideration detailed programmes by water undertakers to meet the nitrate standard in England and the lead standard in Scotland. We await the Commission's considered response to these programmes.

Each water undertaker has been formulating the long-term operating costs and capital expenditure programmes as part of setting the limit to price increases ('K') which is to be applied under the Water Bill to water undertakers. We are reviewing the cost projections which have been submitted to the Department and discussing them with water undertakers individually. We will not be in a position to give new forecasts until these appraisals have been completed. The compliance programmes, together with costings and timetables, will be included in the prospectuses to be published later this year.

Football Match (Hillsborough)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, following the letter of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Minister for Sport, to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill of 11 April, he will describe the circumstances in which he would act upon the complaints of the chief executive of a football club about the inadequacy of ticket allocations at a semi-cup final or cup final; what account he took of police advice in reaching his conclusions; and whether he will review ministerial involvement in overseeing ticket allocation at major fixtures;

(2) what representations his Department received prior to the Football Association's semi-final scheduled for Hillsborough for 15 April about arrangements at the game; what consideration he gave to these representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The hon. Member wrote to me on 22 March about the arrangements at the FA Cup semi-final at Hillsborough on 15 April. No other representation was received. The arrangements for the match will be among the matters to be considered by Lord Justice Taylor's inquiry.

Water Privatisation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the flotation prospectuses for each water authority to be issued.

Mr. Ridley: November.

Football Spectators Bill

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account will be taken of the Hillsborough disaster and the judicial inquiry of Mr. Justice Taylor before the Football Spectators Bill is introduced in the House.

Mr. Moynihan: The timetable for the Football Spectators Bill will allow the House, in considering the Bill, to take account of relevant recommendations from Lord Justice Taylor's inquiry into the Hillsborough disaster.

Local Authority Staff (Pensions)

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals for transferring the cost of pensions increase to the local government superannuation funds in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. There are a number of cogent arguments for transferring pensions increase costs to the funds in addition to basic pension costs which they already bear. It would help to make the true cost of local government pensions more apparent; it would accord with good accountancy practice; it would utilise the current significant surpluses in the funds; and, in the longer term, advance funding would generate its own investment income and reduce total costs.

For these reasons I have concluded that, subject to consultation with the relevant local government interests, regulations should be made to transfer these costs to the superannuation funds from 1 April 1990 onwards. I believe that such a transfer can be achieved without an overall increase in the total sum which local authorities currently spend on superannuation. I have in mind to remove the present requirement that the funds must be in a position to meet all foreseeable future liabilities, and to substitute a provision that they must be able at any point in time to meet three-quarters of their future liabilities. This would be entirely prudential, since the funds would at all times have sufficient capital to meet their obligations for many years ahead. In any case the entitlements of beneficiaries are underwritten by the employing authorities and do not depend on the funds as such.

If we proceed on this basis, I would expect that most local authorities in England and Wales would be able to reduce their total expenditure on superannuation below its present level, on average by about £6 per head of adult population. If, however, local authorities wish to suggest other ways of achieving the same objective, I will be ready to consider them. Meanwhile, I look to the funds' actuaries to work on the basis that the objective from 1 April 1990 will be as I am proposing.

River Mersey (Pollution)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of his Department's staff are responsible for monitoring pollution control in the Mersey.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 April 1989]: Responsibility for controlling and monitoring water quality and pollution in the River Mersey rests with the North West water authority. The Department, through Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, is responsible for the control of discharges by the North West water authority itself and had one full-time principal water inspector plus support staff engaged on this task.

Community Charge

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much a single adult in the county of Cambridgeshire would pay under (a) the community charge and (b) a local income tax based on national average earnings for 1988-89.

Mr. Gummer: Based on 1988-89 figures, a single adult on national average earnings with just the single person's tax allowance would pay a local income tax bill in Cambridgeshire district council of between £465 and £595. This compares with a community charge of between £186 and £231, disregarding the transitional safety net.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to discourage existing teachers from leaving the profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee estimated in its reports in 1988 and 1989 that fewer than 1 per cent. of teachers leave teaching for other paid employment and commented that this wastage rate was low. The attraction of teaching as a career can only be enhanced by the Government's education reforms.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the comments on teacher shortages made by the senior chief inspector in his report, "Standards in Education 1987-88".

Mrs. Rumbold: This report confirms the analysis of teacher shortages which forms the basis of our vigorous action programme to combat the problem.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to monitor the effect of teacher shortages on the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department already collects data annually on vacant teacher posts and we shall continue to do so. Information regulations to be made under section 22 of the Education Reform Act will enable us to obtain annual information on the curriculum offered in schools and on teacher deployment.

Council of Science Ministers

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last attended a meeting of the Council of Science Ministers in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster represents the United Kingdom at the Community's Council of Ministers (Research). He last attended a meeting of the Council on 14 March and gave a full report to the House in the reply given to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 7 April, at columns 314-15.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has issued any guidance to chief education officers regarding comments and information they are able to issue following a vote by parents in favour of a secondary school opting out of local authority control.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department wrote on 13 February to the chief education officer of every local education authority in England setting out my right hon. Friend's views on the conduct of ballots on whether a school should seek grant-maintained status. That letter made it clear that it is in the interests of parents, governors and others that all discussion about a possible application by a school should be well-informed. Accordingly, it asked local education authorities to ensure that any information they provide is factually correct, and represents a proper use of public money. The same principles apply after a ballot as before.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to use his powers under the Education Reform Act to prevent a local education authority from issuing material designed to influence support for an opting-out proposal following a ballot by parents in favour of such a proposal.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Where parents vote to seek grant-maintained status for their school the governing body must publish formal proposals to my right hon. Friend within six months. The local education authority and other interested parties may submit comments on or objections to those proposals within two months of publication, and my right hon. Friend will take these into account in considering and determining the application on its merits.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not use any Siemens ND3 printers.

Computers

Miss EmmaNicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our policy is not to make public details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure, since such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means;

(2) if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of its computer files;

(3) if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department takes advice from the appropriate government authorities on security matters. In the case of unclassified but sensitive data this includes the CCTA IT security and privacy group (part of HM Treasury) which is the central Government advisory authority in this area, and uses its risk analysis and management methodology (CRAMM). It would not be sensible to publish details of actual counter-measures, reviews and risks.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and what plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has contingency plans and staff education programmes as part of its wider information systems strategy, but their effectiveness would be reduced if details were made public.

AIDS

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on what research into drugs to relieve AIDS is taking place in Britain.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is supporting a directed programme of research, worth £31 million cash over five years, to develop vaccines against HIV infection and drugs to relieve AIDS. Over half the research projects in this programme are related to drug development. Copies of a booklet outlining the programme are available in the Library. I understand that many of the pharmaceutical companies are also engaged in such work.

National Medical Centre, Hammersmith

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are, for 1994 to 1999, the estimated costs of the first five years of operation and installation of the new national medical centre at Hammersmith; and what would be the cost of keeping in operation for the same years (a) the Royal post-graduate medical school, Hammersmith, and (b) the clinical research centre, Harrow, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is currently undertaking a detailed appraisal of proposals to improve clinical research in the United Kingdom, including proposals for a new national centre based at the Royal postgraduate medical school, Hammersmith. The costs of such a centre would depend on decisions to be taken in the light of this appraisal. Research costs at the RPMS and the clinical research centre in the period 1994 to 1999 will depend on a variety of decisions about research activities at these institutions prior to 1994 as well as on the outcome of the clinical research proposals currently being appraised.

Schools

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate how many schools currently have decoration classed as less than satisfactory.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not maintain records of the decorative condition of schools. This is a matter for LEAs and others responsible for the schools.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether all school buildings in England and Wales have yet been brought up to the requirements laid down by the 1981 schools premises regulations and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is the responsibility of local education authorities to satisfy the requirements of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. They certify that new school building projects will comply with the regulations when they seek my right hon. Friend's approval. The survey of school buildings, published in 1987, showed that not all existing county and controlled schools met the standards of the regulations. Since that time local authorities have spent substantial sums on improving their school buildings.

Schools in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much each local education authority will be receiving in the current financial year, and the next two financial years, from the school improvement programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 21 December 1988 at column 287. Allocations are made on an annual basis. Information for the next two financial years is not therefore available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all schools in the English and Welsh counties which currently need (a) between £0·5 million and £1 million and (b) over £1·0 million spending on repairs, maintenance or decoration, to bring them into line with the requirements stipulated under the 1981 school premises regulations.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not collected centrally for schools in England. Matters relating to Wales are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any schools which still have a problem with asbestos.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not keep records of asbestos problems in individual schools. This is a matter for LEAs and others responsible for the schools.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools currently have a shortage of furniture.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not keep records of the quantity of furniture in individual schools. This is the responsibility of LEAs and those responsible for schools.

Higher Education

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest estimate of places available in higher education in autumn 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1989]: Applications to enter higher education in 1989-90 are estimated to be about 5 per cent. higher than last year. Actual numbers will depend on the recruitment decisions of each individual institution. We already have record numbers and participation rates, and expect to reach 1 million students for the first time this autumn.

Rating Reform

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that following the introduction of the community charge, institutions of higher education reduce the rents charged to students in respect of that element of their rents presently charged on account of the rates.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1989]: This is a matter for individual institutions, but many students make no contribution to the rates payable on their accommodation, since they are provided for through the central funding of the institutions.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what his priorities are with regard to capital allocations to local education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: In formulating capital allocations priority is given to committed expenditure up to the levels previously indicated to authorities, new projects to meet population growth and new projects to remove surplus places in the schools sector and tertiary projects arising out of approved statutory proposals, and provisions for the capital implications of education support grants in further and higher education. The remaining resources are distributed to local authorities to use for the improvement or replacement of defective buildings. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) on 11 April 1989, at column 426, for the criteria applied to allocating resources for voluntary aided and special agreement schools.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the capital allocation to each local education authority as a percentage of the bid of that local education authority in each of the last nine years;

(2) if he will list the bids for capital allocations in the last nine years from all local education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on local education authorities' cash plans is not available for the years 1981-84. The information for prescribed expenditure for the years 1984-85 to 1989-90 is set out in the table.

Monitoring and follow-up action is carried out by departments and the Civil Service Commission in accordance with the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission codes of practice.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries

68. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Minister for the Arts to what extent he is providing for the building and maintenance of museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I am continuing to give high priority to building and maintenance in our national museums and galleries. Spending on building and maintenance will increase to £55 million by 1991-92, which represents an increase of 53 per cent. since 1987-88.

83. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission to discuss the future funding and administration of national museums.

73. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts what support for the British Film Institute and the National Film and Television School has been achieved in the last 10 years both from Government and private sources.

Mr. Luce: In the last 10 years the British Film Institute has received £83·6 million in Government support and £67·9 million from the private sector. In the same period, the National Film and Television school has received £10·7 million and £9·3 million respectively, from the same two sources.

The Government have protected the essential elements of that service in the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Mr. Nicholls: The last Health and Safety Executive visit to the Palace of Westminster was on 27 July 1988 to discuss and confirm arrangements for health and safety inspection at the Palace and other premises forming the parliamentary estate.

Siemens Printer

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Siemens ND 3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Cope: No Siemens ND 3 printers are used by the Employment Department.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many instances have been detected in his Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) Trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded.

Mr. Cope: It is not the policy of the Employment Department to make public details of computer security incidents since such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Regarding other types of computer misuse, there have been eight instances of fraud since 1981 by authorised users of systems involving falsification of input information, as instanced in the National Audit Office report on "Computer Security in Government Departments" (October 1987).

Specialist advice was sought and has been acted upon on how best to prevent this in future.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department advises small businesses on ways of guarding against unauthorised internal or external penetration of computer files by hackers.

Mr. Cope: The Government's small firms service, now run by the Training Agency, advises small firms on a wide range of business problems. Where detailed knowledge is required, inquirers are referred to specialists.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the security of the computer systems that calculate the value of the retail prices index.

Mr. Cope: Safeguards are incorporated into the retail prices index computer system both to prevent unauthorised access and to secure the system against computer hardware failure.

Dock Workers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the average weekly earnings for the last four years of dock workers in (a) the Netherlands, (b) West Germany, (c) France, (d) Denmark, (e) Sweden, (f) Italy and (g) Spain.

Mr. Nicholls: Comparable data in the form requested are not readily available.

Publicity (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the estimated expenditure by his Department and the Training Agency, respectively, in 1989-90 on publicity on the same basis as used in his answer of 19 April to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras about the estimated expenditure for 1988-89.

Mr. Cope: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) to his previous question, on 10 April 1989.

The planned expenditure by my Department on general publicity in 1989-90, to include that for the Training Agency, remains as stated in table 7.29 on page 25 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 607, published in January 1989. No further detailed information is yet available.

Tourism

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employmemt when he expects the review of the tourism policy to be completed.

Mr. Lee: The review report is currently being considered. The results of the review will be announced in due course.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the findings of the review body on tourism immediately on completion and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 19 January this year at column 284.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now resume payment of section 4 assistance.

Mr. Lee: No. The section 4 scheme is being considered as part of the review of Government tourism policy. An announcement about the future of the scheme will be made in due course.

Wages Councils

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report those organisations and individuals responding to the wages councils consultative document whose responses were deemed to be for abolition, against abolition, or inconclusive according to the table in his reply to the hon. Member for Mid Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 21 March, Official Report, column 556.

Mr. Nicholls: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 23 March, at columns 798-802, in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher). This listed the organisations which responded. It is not this Department's practice to reveal the names of individuals who respond or the content of submissions made by either individuals or organisations.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what materials are provided by his Department to inform people covered by wages councils of their legal entitlements; and what plans he has to improve these materials and their availabilty.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on statutory minimum rates set by wages councils is published in the form of notices which are simple to understand and give details of where further information and advice can be obtained. Notices are sent to every employer known to be affected and the law requires employers to display copies where they can be read by all workers affected and to send a copy to each home worker. Where appropriate the notices are printed in up to eight languages as well as English. There are no plans at present to change the style, content or availability of the notices.

ACAS

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to receive the annual report of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.

Mr. Fowler: I have received the ACAS report for 1988, which will be laid before both Houses of Parliament tomorrow. The report is also to be published tomorrow and copies will then be available from the Vote Office.

Safety-related Software

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what progress is being made by the Health and Safety Executive in the establishment of a formal framework on safety-related software; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 11 April 1989]: The Health and Safety Executive is currently undertaking a study with the aim of developing a design and assessment framwork for safety-related computer software. It is due to be completed in June 1989, when it is intended the proposals will be published, to allow wider commentary before being finalised.

TRANSPORT

Automatic Ticket Barriers

9. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been spent by London Regional Transport on installing the new automatic barriers at London Underground stations.

Mr. Portillo: To date London Underground Limited has spent some £18 million on installing automatic ticket barriers.

Aviation Liberalisation

14. Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will identify the increases in service and cuts in fares that have occurred as a result of the European aviation liberalisation package agreed in December 1987.

Mr. Channon: The European Commission has not yet produced a report on the overall effect of the package, but I am glad to say that we have designated airlines on new routes from London to Arrecife, Mahon, Ibiza, Treviso and Palermo, and second airlines on routes from London to Madrid, Athens, Rome and Milan. Air Europe has reduced fares from London to Paris, Munich, Copenhagen, Oslo and Stockholm by between 12 and 16 per cent.; and many airlines have cut fares for leisure travel.

Local Authority Roads (Report)

15. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations contained in the Audit Commission report, "Improving the Condition of Local Authority Roads."

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The main action is for local authorities. We have encouraged implementation through discussion with the local authority associations. We are discussing with them the recommendations for changes in legislation.

Airport Safety

17. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on recent developments in international co-operation on airport safety matters.

Mr. Channon: There is continuing international co-operation on developments in airport safety and the CAA ensures that licensed airports conform with ICAO standards.

Urban Traffic Control System, London

18. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much the urban traffic control system in London reduces delays at signals.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: By an estimated 25 per cent. over the whole network.

Road Assessment Studies (London)

19. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to date of stage 1 and stage 2 of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total cost of stage 1 of the studies was about £3 million. It is estimated that stage 2 will cost £4 million to complete. In comparison, personal injury accidents on roads in the east London assessment study area alone cost some £50 million each year.

54. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many houses in London have been blighted as a result of the publication, by him of stage 2a of the London assessment studies; and whether he will accept blight notices on these.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Blight provisions do not apply to the options published by the consultants carrying out the London assessment studies.

56. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for public consultation on stage 2 of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall decide the arrangements for public comment on the options nearer the time the consultants' reports are available.

28. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the timetable for decisions on the south London road assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Some of the correspondents on the assessment studies have inquired at various times about the likely timing of decisions. They have been assured that we will try to end the uncertainty caused by rumour and speculation about the outcome as soon as possible.

Road and Rail Investment

21. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now review the criteria by which his Department assesses costs and benefits of road and rail investment proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Broadly comparable criteria are used for appraising investment in roads and railways. They take account of the different ways in which each mode is financed and operated, the main difference being that benefits to rail users can be recovered through fares. Our views were set out last year in the Government's response to the Transport Committee's report on the financing of rail services, and in our recent statement on transport in London.

London (Traffic Flow)

22. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to improve traffic flow on the main routes into London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic flows on the network will benefit from our support to a range of traffic management measures throughout London, including advanced and responsive urban traffic control systems and more effective control of parking and from our promotion of safe, efficient and attractive public transport services.

We are helping to improve the flow of traffic on the strategic London road network through the national trunk road programme in London and small improvement schemes.

We are providing financial support to appropriate borough road schemes and have issued a traffic management guidance circular to the boroughs.

Manchester Airport

23. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report the progress that has been made concerning negotiations on air service agreements applying to Manchester airport.

Mr. Channon: The aviation measures adopted in the EC last year created opportunities for routes to be established between United Kingdom regional airports and the continent. New opportunities have recently been won for services between Manchester and Hong Kong and Malaysia and Pakistan. We are at present negotiating for further Manchester routes with the United States and Singapore.

Road Traffic Accidents

24. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the trends in deaths caused by road traffic accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Downwards. Deaths in road accidents reached a post-war peak of 7,985 in 1966. They have fallen steadily since then, to 6,614 in 1977 and to 5,125 in 1987. The estimated number of road deaths in 1988 was 5,041.

Airline Security

25. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of the BAA to discuss airline security.

Mr. Channon: I have no plans to do so at the moment, but I expect very shortly to receive from the chairman the progress report mentioned in the reply given to the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) on 31 January, at column 146. I will then consider whether a further meeting with the chairman would be desirable.

British Rail

30. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans next to meet the chair of British Rail; and what subjects he plans to discuss.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend plans next to meet the chairman of British Rail on 17 May to discuss a variety of railway matters.

51. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) earlier today.

61. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what was discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of British Rail on 19 April when they discussed a variety of railway matters.

Lorry Wheels

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if his Department intends to make new recommendations on the manufacture or maintenance of the systems for securing lorry wheels to axles in the light of the fatal accident at Rogerstone, Newport, Gwent on 7 April 1988;

(2) if any investigation was undertaken into the safety of lorry wheels following the fatal accident at Rogerstone, Newport, Gwent on 7 April 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department takes a continuing interest in the safety of lorry wheels through the setting of regulations, certification of vehicle components, annual testing and spot-checks. It is currently involved in consideration being given by the BSI to the recent reports by the Motor Industry Research Association, in order to see if changes are required in the current British Standard and regulations.

The importance of good maintenance standards is regularly discussed with the freight industry. Vehicles are banned or operators' licences withdrawn where maintenance is unsatisfactory. Last year 77,937 roadside spot-checks were carried out on heavy goods vehicles—36 per cent. up on the previous year.

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the information his Department has collected on accidents in the past three years that have been caused by wheels becoming detached from lorries and other large vehicles;

(2) if there has been any increase detected by his Department in the number of accidents involving wheels becoming detached from lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following numbers of incidents involving wheel detachments have been reported to the Vehicle Inspectorate in the last three years:

	Number
1986	37
1987	41
1988	30

Bypasses

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to providing additional funds for the construction of bypasses around important towns on trunk roads; if he will consider assistance to Essex county council for such a bypass around Ongar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are some 140 bypasses in the trunk road programme. These contribute to the Government's objectives for the programme, which include the improvement of the environment by removing through traffic from unsuitable roads in towns and villages.

Ongar is served by local roads. Transport supplementary grant is available to help fund local highway authorities' programmes of capital expenditure on these roads. In determining how much of an authority's expenditure to accept for TSG, the Secretary of State considers the extent to which the roads concerned are of more than local importance, the extent to which the people working or living in the authority's area would be relieved of the effects of heavy through traffic, and the merits of competing bids for limited resources.

If Essex county council includes proposals for an Ongar bypass in its annual transport policies and programme submission, my right hon. Friend will be pleased to consider them.

M25

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the lengths of the M25 for which his Department gave assurances, or made public statements, at public inquiries or elsewhere, that they would not be lit, (b) the lengths in miles and the standard of the motorway affected and (c) for which of these sections lighting is now being planned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No undertakings were given at public inquiries that sections of the M25 would not be lit at some future date, but undertakings were given that the following three sections would not be lit at the outset:

The section between junctions 3 and 5, Swanley to Sevenoaks, 8·6 miles dual 3 lane;

the section between junctions 8 and 10, Reigate—Leatherhead—Wisley, 13·3 miles dual 3 lane; and the section between junctions 18 and 19 at Chorleywood 3·1 miles dual 3 lane.

The section between junctions 18 and 19 at Chorleywood may have lighting installed this year. The need for lighting on remaining unlit sections is being considered as part of the M25 review currently in progress.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those lengths of the M25 and adjacent motorway sections on which there are sensors to measure average traffic speed and detect incidents and unstable flow; how far apart the sensors are located; whether they are placed in all lanes; for which sections they can give an indication of average speed, and average hourly flow per lane; and if he will give the current average peak-hour and off-peak speed, for all lanes averaged, for those sections so monitored.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The equipment currently in operation measures traffic flows. It does not measure average traffic speeds (which are surveyed separately) or detect incidents or unstable flow. An incident detection system is soon to be commissioned on the approach to and within the Holmesdale and Bell Common tunnels. This will use sensors at 500 m intervals, with a threshold alarm, to warn the police of slow moving traffic queues. The need for wider use of automatic incident detection equipment is being considered in the review of the motorway.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of the M25 can, in practice, be observed by a closed-circuit television camera for incident verification, and guidance to emergency services when an incident is being handled on the motorway; what M25 interchanges are currently covered by closed-circuit television; and how many miles of the M25 main carriageways can be observed by these cameras.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Closed-circuit television (CCTV) is being provided on M25 in accordance with a departmental standard which defines the "Criteria for the provision of CCTV on motorways". At present CCTV coverage is available to the police at the Homesdale and Bell Common tunnels and at junctions 15, 20 to 23, 25 to 27. Contracts have been let which will progressively extend this CCTV coverage to almost all M25 junctions by the summer of 1990.

The carriageway mileage which can be observed by the cameras cannot be quoted since their range varies at each individual location depending upon physical positioning, geographical topography and the weather at any given time.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average response time between an incident occurring on the M25 and (a) its identification and (b) a rescue or breakdown truck reaching the incident, where the vehicles immobilised are blocking one or more lanes of a carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available. Incidents are mainly reported to, or identified by the police via the emergency telephone system, vehicle patrols and the use of closed circuit television at some locations. Response times vary according to the time of day, location and nature of the incident.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, on the existing dual-four lane sections of the M25 between the A30 and the M4, the outermost lane acts as part of the means of carrying through traffic, or as a merge and diverge facility for traffic using the adjacent junctions to this section of the motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The nearside lanes are signed for use by traffic joining or leaving the motorway at the junctions.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many directional miles of the M25 have specially constructed noise or visual mounds alongside the hard shoulder to mitigate the impact of the motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are about 32 miles of specially constructed noise bunds and barriers along the M25.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the average five-day and seven-day traffic flows for both 16-hour and 24-hour days for each section of the M25, and for the Dartford tunnel and approach roads, for (a) 1986 and (b) the latest available year, indicating the month of the count in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The requested information is as follows:

Note: Estimates of average daily flow are not corrected for seasonal effects, so the figures given above are influenced by the month of count. Estimates for 1988 are not yet available.
n.a. Data not available.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the latest available average daily, average weekday, average morning peak-hour and average evening peak-hour traffic flow entering the M25 at each of the entrance slip roads from other roads or motorways;

(2) if he will list the latest available average daily, average weekday, average morning peak-hour and average evening peak-hour traffic flow leaving the M25 at each of its exit slip roads to other roads or motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our consultants conducting the M25 review are obtaining figures of traffic entering or leaving the M25 at each junction to show the average daily Monday-Thursday flow, and the average morning and evening peak flows. These will be available in due course.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many patrolling breakdown and rescue trucks are in service on the M25 during normal weekday commuting and working hours (a) on the motorway as a whole and (b) per each 20 directional miles; and who funds and directs the operation and placing of these vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Dedicated recovery vehicles do not patrol the M25. Recovery vehicles are stationed at major roadworks to deal with accidents and breakdowns within those works. They are also stationed at the Dartford tunnel. Elsewhere, recovery vehicles are summoned by the police, who select them in rotation from a list of local garages. Alternatively, drivers may elect to use their own recovery organisation. Vehicle owners pay for recovery except within major roadworks where the Department provides the service.

We are examining the present arrangements, in consultation with the police and the Department's agent authorities, with the aim of reducing the times for which carriageways are obstructed by accidents and other incidents.

M40

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the exact tender arrangements for the M40 extension from Wendlebury to Waterstock.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have today invited competitive tenders from civil engineering contractors for the construction of the final section of the M40 extension between Waterstock and Wendlebury. Firms have been asked to submit tenders within six weeks based on their own choice of construction period. We will be offering the successful contractor a bonus for finishing ahead of schedule with financial penalties if completion is delayed.

Mersey Tunnels

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, he will now explain how any waiving of interest payments with respect to the Mersey tunnels would be authorised and financed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If the Merseyside passenger transport authority provides the Secretary of State with proposals for putting the tunnels on a sound financial footing which show that Government assistance through the waiving of interest payments is justified, we shall consider with it how that can best be done.

Roads (South-East)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to obtain a copy of the recent report by the Society of County Surveyors about the case for roads improvement in the south-east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have read with interest the recent report by the County Surveyors' Society entitled "Review of Highway Investment Needs up to the year 2001 on Motorways, Primary and Strategic Routes in England (excluding London)".

We shall consider the views of the society on national roads in the review of the trunk road programme which we are currently undertaking.

We have recently invited all local highway authorities to submit bids by 31 July for transport supplementary grant for 1990-91 for local roads of more than local importance. In considering their bids, the local highway authorities may also find the report of some assistance.

The new system of credit approvals rather than capital allocations should direct more resources towards local roads capital spending.

We agree with the basic message from the county surveyors that increased spending on roads will benefit the economy, reduce casualties and improve the environment.

Aviation Security

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is ready to report the outcome of his review of aviation security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The purpose of aviation security is to protect passengers and aircrew from attacks by terrorists and other criminals. At the same time every effort has to be made to facilitate the smooth operation of airports and air services. I have to judge this in the light of the changing threat to civil aviation and of security incidents such as hijacks and sabotage. The Lockerbie disaster marked a trend for terrorist bomb attacks on airliners to become increasingly severe. Even tighter security measures are necessary even if this is at the expense of some cost and inconvenience to passengers.

My aviation security review is a continuing one. I have already discussed progress on it with the Transport Select Committee. The Committee's report on its current inquiry into airport security will be of further help to me as my review goes forward.

Immediately after Lockerbie increased security measures were ordered for United States airlines, particularly for hold baggage. I attended an emergency meeting of the National Aviation Security Committee on 5 January in the light of which I decided to bring in further measures for United States airlines in relation to cabin baggage, hold baggage and cargo. I ordered new rules for the issue and use of passes at all United Kingdom airports and on 6 April I announced the introduction of a package of measures for all our major airports that should provide better security for restricted areas and for aircraft, passengers and baggage in those areas.

I have now set firm objectives for a further tightening of security. They are:

(1) closer examination of the items taken on board aircraft, such as radios and computers, which might be used to conceal explosive devices;
(2) screening all hold baggage on flights at higher risk;
(3) further tightening of the security requirements for cargo, mail and courier consignments;

(4) tighter requirements for the physical separation of inbound and outbound passengers. (This may require structural alterations, or equivalent safeguards, at some airports.);

(5) changes to the design and construction of aircraft interiors to make it harder to hide weapons or explosives in them, and to make them easier to search.

Achieving these objectives will take time. They require careful co-ordination, more staff, more equipment, further training and close co-operation with our aviation industry and with other likeminded countries.

It is not enough to lay down security requirements; we must check that airports and airlines carry them out. I now intend to more than double the strength of the aviation security division. My team of aviation security advisers made 190 visits to airports last year. They will now be able to carry out more inspections and spot checks, as well as special surveys to determine whether new measures are needed. To emphasise their monitoring role they will be reconstituted as the Aviation Security Inspectorate. Each of the 20 or so larger airports will be visited frequently, and will be inspected formally and comprehensively at least once a year. Other airports will be formally inspected at regular intervals. Inspectors will also make overseas visits to ascertain that the security afforded to British airlines is satisfactory. They will be involved, as the advisers are now, in advising on the appropriate measures to counter the threat, in the development of new security measures and policies, and in the day-to-day response to security questions as they arise.

Under the Aviation Security Act 1982 I have certain powers to direct airport managers and aircraft operators for the purpose of protecting aircraft, airports and air navigation facilities from acts of violence. My aviation security advisers have the power to enter and inspect aircraft, and to detain them if necessary for that purpose, or enter and inspect any building or part of an airport.

But there are certain areas where my powers are more limited than I should like. I shall therefore seek new powers from Parliament to secure more effective implementation of security measures.

Over the last two years my Department has put together a clearly defined programme to carry out research and development into aviation security equipment. It has made arrangements with the Home Office's scientific research and development branch and the Ministry of Defence's Royal Armaments Research and Development Establishment to develop new detection techniques, and to conduct trials of commercial equipment for airport use. The budget for this work is about half a million pounds a year.

I now want this work stepped up, and I am doubling the budget for the current financial year. The research establishments will bring in extra staff and the work will be co-ordinated by a full-time project officer—a scientist—in the aviation security division of my Department. The projects will include the continuing examination of commercially available equipment for explosives detection, to assess the suitability of the new generation of advanced X-rays and explosive vapour detectors and other systems in this field. We shall also sponsor work on new techniques for the bulk detection of explosives in baggage and cargo.

We are keenly interested in the thermal neutron analysis (TNA) machines now being developed in the USA and in the United Kingdom for detecting explosives in baggage. The American project is sponsored by the FAA, and we have now received its formal proposal to install one of the six production machines at Gatwick or Heathrow later this year. We are examining the practical considerations with BAA and expect very soon to be able to reply favourably to the FAA proposal.

In this country work is being carried out under a contract between the Atomic Energy Authority's Harwell laboratory and a private company. We have kept in touch with progress on this project and are discussing with its sponsors the possibility of funding further work.

But it is too soon to know whether TNA can by itself solve all the problems of screening baggage and we must continue to look for additional techniques.

Aviation security is a matter of international concern. The standards and recommended practices which govern aviation security are set by the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO). It is important that security worldwide should be co-ordinated so that it is everywhere in line with the threat to civil aviation.

In February I attended a special ministerial meeting held by the Council of ICAO to discuss the implications of the Lockerbie disaster. I reported the successful outcome of this meeting to the House on 21 February. An ambitious programme of work began at ICAO designed to improve security standards worldwide. A meeting of the ICAO aviation security panel has been convened for May to take matters forward. Meanwhile, I look forward to a further discussion with United States Secretary of Transportation Skinner when he visits London later this week.

My aim is to introduce sound and practical measures that give a high level of security but interfere as little as possible with the operation of our airports and airlines and so with the travelling public. Such measures need careful preparation in close consultation with the industry and others. I am determined to press ahead with this work so as to achieve worthwhile and lasting improvements to aviation security in this country.

36. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the full availability of thermal neutron analysis machines for airport security at British airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend today to the hon. Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) and to the hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith).

45. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many security breaches have occurred at British airports since 21 December 1988; how many reviews of security he has called for since then; and what action he is now taking to improve security.

Mr. Channon: Fourteen security incidents have been notified to the Department. Nine of these involved breaches of varying degrees of seriousness in the requirements of the aviation security programme. Two other cases are still under investigation. On the latter parts of the question I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) and to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith).

Fishing Vessel Laurel (Incident)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning an incident at 8.45 am on Monday 17 April involving the fishing vessel Laurel and a submarine in the Irish sea; what action he has taken; what investigations will be undertaken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 April 1989]: My Department received a report on 17 April that the Isle of Man registered fishing vessel Laurel had been towed backwards. The vessel was subsequently forced to cut her nets for safety, resulting in the loss of her fishing gear. She then returned to Peel. The incident would appear to have involved a United States Navy submarine which was operating in the area at the time and which, on surfacing, was found to have sustained superficial damage. It is understood that the United States authorities are conducting an investigation into the incident.

The Laurel was outside territorial waters at the time and in such circumstances it is not normal practice for my Department to hold an investigation. The Isle of Man marine administration is inquiring into the incident.

High-Speed Rail Line

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 17 March, Official Report, columns 371-72, whether, if the present year is the first year of operation of the high-speed line for the purposes of the net present value calculation referred to, the full construction costs, including the interest on construction finance, will be compounded forward to the first year of operation; and with what compounding factor;

(2) further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 17 March, Official Report, columns 371-72, whether for the purposes of the net present value calculation referred to, the present year will be taken as the first year of construction or the first year of operation of the high-speed line.

Mr. Portillo [holding replies 20 April 1989]: There is no strict rule about which year is taken as the year to which the costs and benefits of a proposed project are discounted. However, it is common practice to discount to the year in which the project is appraised (the decision year). The choice of year to be taken as the "present" year for purposes of the NPV calculation does not affect the assessment of the project's viability. If the first year of operation is taken instead of the decision year, the NPV of the construction costs will be higher, since they will have been compounded forward, but the NPV of the revenues will also be higher, since they will not have been discounted back for so many years. If the NPV is positive when discounted to one particular year, then, using the same discount rate, it will also be positive when discounted (or compounded) to any other year. The compound rate used would be the same as the discount rate to be applied to the project (and described in previous answers to my right hon. Friend). Interest charges would not be included, since the discount (or compound) rate is used to measure the cost of capital resources instead of the interest rate; to include both would be double counting.

London (Transport Studies)

31. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many studies into aspects of transport in London his Department is currently sponsoring; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is currently sponsoring nine studies into aspects of transport in London. They are:

Study	Cost £
Stage 2 of the four London assessment studies	4,000,000
Central London rail study (jointly with BR and LRT)	[1]400,000
East London rail study (jointly with DoE and LRT)	170,000
A4/M4 corridor study	200,000
Trunk road signing review	470,000
Development of traffic management and accident prevention measures	1,700,000
Company assisted travel	125,000
Heathrow and south west London orbital movement study (HASQUAD)	500,000
Tourist coaches in London	168,000

[1] Approximately.

Some of the studies require the use of the London transportation survey model. The total costs of the development, maintenance and use of this model between April 1986 and February 1989 was £2,300,000.

A59 Corridor

32. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the consultants' report on the A59 corridor involving Ormskirk, Southport and Preston.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The findings of the consultants' review are being considered in the context of the current review of the trunk road programme.

We hope to make an announcement in early summer.

Network SouthEast

33. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment in Network SouthEast.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will next meet the chairman on 17 May to discuss a wide range of railway issues.

Waterloo-Southampton Rail Service (Derailment)

37. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what report he has received from his inspector into the cause of the derailment of the 10.36 am train from Waterloo to Southampton on Thursday 6 April; what steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence of this accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail's internal inquiry into this derailment has taken place. Once I have received a copy of the inquiry report, I shall decide, upon the advice of the railway inspectorate, whether any action is required.

Car Mileage (Recordings)

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate, using United States' experience, the cost of recording car mileages through the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The annual cost of recording car mileages at the driver and vehicle licensing centre is estimated to be in excess of £3 million, in addition to the costs of setting up such a system. No comparison with the United States' experience can be made given the diversity of licensing and registration procedures applicable in individual states. The problems are accuracy and effectiveness as well as cost.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King).

50. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he has refused to introduce a system of mileage logging when vehicle excise licences are renewed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's reasons for not doing so are set out in my letter of 16 March to the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Gordon Borrie. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Roads and Motoring (Expenditure)

40. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of public expenditure on roads and motoring during the last year for which information is available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Gross public expenditure on roads and activities related to motor vehicles and motoring in Great Britain in 1988-89 is presently forecast to be £4,450 million. This figure does not include police expenditure on traffic regulation.

Taxis and Private Hire Vehicles

41. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish his proposals relating to taxis and private hire vehicles.

Mr. Portillo: No date has been fixed.

Manchester Airport

42. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement about rail links to Manchester airport.

Mr. Portillo: Last month my officials met officials of the relevant parties to discuss outstanding issues associated with the proposed rail link. Encouraging and substantial progress has been made. I now await a formal investment submission from the British Railways Board.

Road Accidents

43. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and serious injuries occurred on United Kingdom roads in 1987, and each of the previous five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures required, on how many deaths and serious injuries occurred on United Kingdom roads in 1987, and each of the previous five years, are shown in the table.

Road casualties in the United Kingdom: 1982-87

	Killed	Seriously injured	All killed or seriously injured
1982	6,150	82,242	88,392
1983	5,618	72,923	78,541
1984	5,788	75,524	81,312
1985	5,342	72,128	77,470
1986	5,618	70,577	76,195
1987	5,339	66,178	71,517

Provisional figures for 1988 for Great Britain indicate that there were 5,050 deaths in road accidents, a fall of 2 per cent. compared with 1987.

Tunnels (Safety Standards)

44. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the emergency services to discuss safety standards in tunnels.

Mr. Portillo: There are regular meetings between the railway inspectorate, and the emergency services to discuss safety in railway tunnels.

Gatwick Airport (Runway)

46. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will open talks with BAA Ltd. to institute a study of the case for a second runway at Gatwick airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is due to provide my right hon. Friend in July with advice on airport capacity to 2005, including runway capacity for the London area. He will wish to consider the advice before responding to the recent Select Committee on Transport's recommendation that all efforts should be made to provide a second main runway at Gatwick.

Air Travellers (Delay)

47. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce delays to air travellers at British airports this summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority set out the strategy of the national air traffic services for relieving congestion in 1989 and the years to 1995 in its advice "Strategies for Making Good Use of Airspace 1989-95". This was published last December and copies placed in the Library.

The United Kingdom is also working with other European countries in the International Civil Aviation Organisation and in Eurocontrol to improve co-operation and co-ordination between air traffic services. An improved air traffic flow management system was recently brought into operation in readiness for summer traffic levels.

Road Traffic Act

48. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the operation of the Road Traffic Act.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We regularly keep under review all factors that influence safety on Britain's roads, including those matters required by law. Proposals for a major reform of road traffic legislation were published on 7 February in a White Paper, "The Road User and the Law" (Cm. 576).

Peterborough (Explosion)

49. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the report on the Peterborough explosion to be published; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the report on the Peterborough explosion to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A publication date for the report into the Peterborough explosion cannot be set until the investigations by the Health and Safety Executive have been completed.

Central London Rail Study

53. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much fares on LRT services and British Rail's Network SouthEast services would have to rise, in real terms, to pay for the major upgrading programme and the full cross package of proposals in the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: It is too early to say. Further work is currently being done on the financing of the central London rail study proposals.

P and O

55. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chair of P and O; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of P and O on 18 January 1989. He discussed a wide range of transport issues.

London Airports (Night Flights)

57. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the regulations governing night flights of jet aircraft from London's airports, particularly of those in the NNC category.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The present night restrictions at Heathrow and Gatwick were introduced in 1988 and apply for five years. My right hon. Friend, however, has undertaken to review the night noise climate at Gatwick after the current summer season. This could lead to an adjustment of quotas if it is apparent that disturbance under the new restrictions regime has become worse, rather than lessening as we expect.

East Anglia (Trunk Road Network)

58. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on improvements to the trunk road network in East Anglia.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are 24 schemes costing more than £200 million at various stages of preparation in the current programme for improvement of the trunk road network in East Anglia. They are all scheduled for completion by 1995; many of them earlier. Good progress is being maintained.

Further possible improvements to trunk roads benefiting East Anglia are being considered in the current comprehensive review of the trunk road programme. We expect to make an announcement in the early summer.

Road Safety

59. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he plans to bring forward to improve road safety.

60. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he plans to bring forward to improve road safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We announced on 19 April at column 163 a series of new measures intended to reduce the unacceptably high casualty rate among pedestrians. I also announced on 18 April at column 106 decisions on a number of aspects of our earlier proposals for improving motorcycle safety. Our priority now will be to implement all these measures as soon as practicable.

We shall shortly bring before the House for approval regulations to implement the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Rear Seat Belts by Children) Act 1988.

The main task is to help generate news and current affairs coverage of the 100 deaths each week and just over 6,000 injuries.

Traffic Congestion

62. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to alleviate the present situation of drivers being stuck in road jams of (i) 26 miles and (ii) over 30 miles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We need more road capacity and roads which last longer, drivers who cause fewer crashes and better information systems to warn of incidents and congestion. Action is being taken in each case.

63. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the cost to the economy of delays and congestion on the roads of Britain during 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran).

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to his Department's computer files.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of its computer files.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department keeps all aspects of computer security under regular review. Arrangements are reviewed annually by the Departments information technology steering committee.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not the policy of the Department to make public the scope for damage. Such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether staff are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and what plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Security managers are responsible for staff education programmes and the development of contingency plans. Effectiveness would be reduced if details were made public.

Data Protection

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department has taken to protect data in transit by electronic means.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department takes advice from the appropriate Government authorities on security matters, including the Central Computing and Telecommunications Agency. To publish details of actual risks and countermeasures would itself constitute a breach of security.

Motorways

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Department's standard for motorways of more than dual-three lane width requires the motorway to be continuously lit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's standard allows motorways of more than dual-three lane width to be lit where appropriate.

Goods and Public Service Vehicles

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now received the review of goods and public service vehicles operator licensing; when he intends to publish the review; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 21 March at column 530.

Channel Tunnel

12. Mr. Riddick To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the implications of the Channel tunnel for the Yorkshire area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have received a number especially when I attended a conference in York on the Channel tunnel. I believe that it can benefit all parts of the United Kingdom, including Yorkshire.

20. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the date on which the Channel tunnel will open.

Mr. Portillo: Eurotunnel has recently announced a new target completion date of 15 June 1993.

26. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with British Rail routes for freight traffic from the Channel tunnel to the regions; and if he will make a statement.

29. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with British Rail routes for freight traffic from the Channel tunnel to the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The routeing of Channel tunnel rail freight traffic is entirely a matter for British Rail. Its proposals for services to the regions will be set out in the plan it has to produce by the end of this year under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

27. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to improve communications to the south-west of England so that the area can benefit from the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Rail access between the south-west and the Channel tunnel is the responsibility of British Rail. It is required by section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act to publish a plan by the end of the year setting out its proposals for international passenger and freight services serving various parts of the country. It has not yet completed the regional consultations in preparation for this plan. Our national road planning takes into account the requirements of road traffic to and from the tunnel. A review of the trunk road programme is in progress, and we expect to make an announcement in the spring.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet Yorkshire regional managers of British Rail to discuss the implications for Yorkshire of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: I meet British Rail's regional managers from time to time. They will, I am sure, contribute to BR's plan for Channel tunnel freight and passenger services, which British Rail is obliged to publish by the end of the year in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the general line of route of his proposed new road from Southampton to the entrance of the Channel tunnel; and whether it will be a single or dual carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no firm proposals. As part of our current review of the trunk road programme we are considering whether there should be a study of the need for additional capacity from the Channel tunnel and the M20 westwards to relieve existing roads. We hope to make an announcement about the outcome of the review by early summer.

34. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to approve proposals from British Rail for every passenger and all items of freight from and to the Channel tunnel to all destinations in the United Kingdom to pass through central London.

Mr. Portillo: BR's passenger and freight services through the Channel tunnel must operate on a commercial basis. Subject to that and to parliamentary approval for new lines where needed, the routes used by British Rail for its passenger and freight traffic are the responsibility of the British Railways Board. They do not require Government approval.

39. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received on the need for a direct link to the Channel tunnel for the north and Scotland.

Mr. Portillo: I have received some representations on the need for good communications between the Channel tunnel and the North and Scotland. There will be direct links from the tunnel into the United Kingdom road and rail networks. Out national roads planning takes account of the requirements of road traffic to and from the tunnel. Representations on rail are best made to the working groups which British Rail has set up in each region as part of its planning for international passenger and freight services.

EMPLOYMENT

Young Employees

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total cost to central Government funds of the community industry scheme in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; what was the cost per young employee; and how much each young employee was being paid on average in each year.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the following tables:

Table 1
Community Industry Scheme—total costs to central Government funds in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89

Year	Amount £
1986-87	25,011,000
1987-88	25,513,000
1988-89	25,203,000

Table 2
Community Industry Scheme—cost per young employee in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89

Year	Amount £
1986-87	3,682
1987-88	3,870
1988-89	4,000

Table 3
Community Industry Scheme—average pay per young employee in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89

Year	Amount £
1986-87	1,915·08
1987-88	1,819·65
1988-89	1,666·64

Notes:

1. In Tables 1-3 the figures for the year 1988-89 are estimated, as final year end information is not yet available.
2. The decrease in average pay per young employee in 1987-88 and 1988-89 reflects the scheme's success in attracting a greater number of 16 and 17-year-olds whose rates of pay are lower than those per 18 and 19-year-olds.

Community Options Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether employment training trainees who opt to take up voluntary work organised under the community options programme will be required (a) to sign on as unemployed and (b) to satisfy the availability for work condition; and whether they will continue to receive the £10 training premium.

Mr. Nicholls: People who choose to take up community opportunities after employment training, and who wish to claim unemployment benefit and/or income support, will be required to satisfy the appropriate legislation.

Participants on community opportunities are not trainees and so will not receive a training premium. Their travelling expenses will be met in full.

Community Industry Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to merge the community industry scheme with employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans to merge the community industry scheme with employment training.

Redundancy Notices

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many employees of (a) the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders, (b) the community task force and (c) the Apex trust, supported by funds from the community programme or job training scheme, have been issued with redundancy notices during the transition from CP/JTS to ET; and how many have been issued with redundancy notices during the operation of ET to date.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The following figures are for employees declared redundant, within the meaning of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, during the transition from the community programme and the job training scheme to employment training and during the operation of employment training to date;

Organisation	Number of redundancies
National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders	250
Community Task Force	150
Apex Trust	7

Mines (Health and Safety)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the proposed amendments to the regulations on health and safety in the mines are intended to leave these matters within the discretion of management rather than subject to the authority of Her Majesty's inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Responsibility for health and safety continues to rest primarily with management. It is the duty of HSE's inspectors to ensure that the law is being observed and advise on working practices. Any new regulations proposed by the Health and Safety Commission will maintain or improve safety standards.

Regional Policy

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will reconsider his Department's regional employment policies in the light of the unemployment figures released by his Department on 13 April.

Mr. Lee: The policies of my Department are kept under continuous review in the light of changing circumstances.

The March unemployment figures published on 13 April showed that in all regions of the United Kingdom unemployment was at a lower level than in March 1988. Total United Kingdom unemployment has fallen to its lowest level for over eight years, and there are well over 26 million people in employment—the highest number ever.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no Siemens ND3 printers in either the ODA or Diplomatic Service wings of the FCO.

El Salvador

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or plans to make, to the El Salvadorean Government concerning the case of Eliseo Cordova Aguilar, vice-president of the Salvadorean Institute of Social Security Co-operative, abducted by El Salvadorean authorities on 12 July 1988.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that Sr. Cordova Aguilar was sized by armed men in civilian clothing on 12 July 1988. He has not been seen since.

We have made no specific representations to the Government of El Salvador on this case. However, we have made plain the importance we attach to proper respect for human rights both to the present Government in El Salvador and to President-elect Cristiani, as well as in international fora, most recently at the UNCHR in February 1989.

We remain in close touch with human rights organisations and other interested bodies in El Salvador, and we shall continue to monitor the situation closely.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Aushad Iqbal is to be issued with a visa by the post in Islamabad to join his wife in the United Kingdom; when Mr. Iqbal's appeal, No. —TH/36030/87/6216 was upheld by the immigration appeal tribunal; and when the post was instructed to issue a visa to Mr. Iqbal.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information required is not immediately available and a further reply will be sent to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 24 April.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Luxembourg on 24 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed on the continuing need for a coherent and carefully differentiated policy towards the countries of eastern Europe.

With the regard to Romania, the Council agree on the suspension of negotiations for a trade and co-operation agreement. Their resumption would require clear evidence of a significant improvement in Romania's respect for human rights, and observance of its CSCE obligations. The United Kingdom strongly endorsed this unequivocal message of serious Community concern at the situation in Romania.

The Council also noted encouraging developments in the situation in Poland, and agreed that the Community should adopt a more flexible position in current negotiations for a trade and co-operation agreement. The United Kingdom strongly supports a positive Community approach to Poland, reflecting progress in the implementation of Polish economic and political reforms.

The Council also received reports on preliminary Commission discussions with the Soviet Union on a trade and co-operation agreement, and with the Gulf Co-operation Council on a second stage agreement.

Noting the concerns of some member states on textiles, the Council generally welcomed the results of the mid-term review of the Uruguay round, completed in Geneva earlier this month, which laid the foundations for substantive negotiations for the remainder of the round. The Council also noted progress in negotiations with the United Kingdom on the dispute over the EC's directive banning meat from animals reared with hormones.

An EC/Morocco Co-operation Council was held in the margins of the Council meeting.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judges (East Anglia)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General how many additional judges he has appointed in the East Anglian region; what additional court rooms and related resources and staff have been provided to support them; and at what cost.

The Attorney-General: In the period 1 January 1988 to 31 December 1988 the number of judges assigned to the Chelmsford courts administrator's group within the south eastern circuit increased by two. The salary of a circuit judge is £48,100. During the same period, a combined court centre was opened in Norwich, being a net addition of one courtroom at a cost of a little more than £7 million. There has been no change in the complement of staff.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Knitwear Machinery (Greece)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to seek to bring to an end the current payments of 50 per cent. grant in Greece on the purchase of new knitwear machinery in that country.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that assistance of this type would be permissible for investments in the Attica and border regions of Greece. Regional assistance is a legitimate form of assistance under article 93(2) of the Treaty of Rome. Under certain circumstances, United Kingdom knitwear companies investing in particular areas of the United Kingdom could be eligible for similar support.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Forth: There are no Siemens ND3 printers in use in my Department.

GATT

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress his Department has made in the recent GATT negotiations in Geneva; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 10 April at column 396.

House of Fraser

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster under what section and subsections of the Companies Act he initiated his Department's inquiry into the affairs of the House of Fraser Holdings.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the inspectors who considered the report dated 15 July 1988 submitted by buyers acting for the House of Fraser considered that report prior to its presentation to Ministers on 23 July 1988.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors considered fully and carefully all information and evidence received by them before submitting their report to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State.

Airtours

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is satisfied that the interests of passengers are fully protected in travel schemes to the Caribbean offered by companies such as Airtours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Airlines operating charter flights originating in the United Kingdom and carrying United Kingdom passengers are required to operate aircraft in accordance with the airworthiness standards of the state with whom the aircraft is registered. Such standards must be equal to or above the airworthiness standards specified by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. Operators are also required to maintain adequate insurance cover. Charter flights of this nature must also be organised through a travel organiser holding a valid Air Travel Organisers Licence issued by the United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority.

(2) what was the highest level of total coliforms per 100 ml found in the 1988 bathing water survey at (a) Oxwich bay, (b) Saundersfoot and (c) Whitesands.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is contained within the 1988 bathing water survey report, a copy of which, as the hon. Member will know, has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the details of those samples in (a) Kinmel bay, (b) Rhyl and (c) Cold Knapp, Barry, sampled during the 1988 bathing water survey which failed to conform to the standards of the EEC coliform directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

[1] Total number of samples taken 21.
[2] Total number of samples taken 18.

The samples which failed account for only a small proportion of those taken throughout the 1988 season. The medians were much lower. The Welsh water authority has in hand a programme of remedial works to ensure full compliance with the EC bathing water directive of all listed bathing waters in the Principality.

M4 Motorway

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action his Department will be taking to minimise delays to traffic during the construction of the M4 between Baglan and Lonlas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Only that part of the A48 trunk road between Earlswood and Lonlas is likely to be significantly affected by construction of this final section of the M4. Detailed traffic management measures will be taken by the appointed contractor to ensure the continuing free flow of vehicles along it.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds that enables him to assess the extent to which potable water in Wales complies with the European Community directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/77/EEC).

Mr. Grist: Welsh water authority has the responsibility for ensuring that potable water within the Principality meets the standards of the directive.

The Welsh Office holds information concerning time-limited derogations and delays, which have been granted under articles 9 and 20 of the directive, in respect of sources which do not fully meet the standards. The water authority's progress in achieving compliance where derogations and delays have been granted is regularly reviewed.

The authority and the water companies in Wales have also submitted preliminary programmes of remedial work in relation to the proposed drinking water quality regulations.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost at current prices to the Welsh water authority of complying with the European Community directive relating to the quality of water for human consumption (80/77/EEC).

Mr. Grist: The full cost of the programme is still being evaluated.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost at current prices to the Welsh water authority to bring the 11 bathing beaches which failed to comply with bathing water directive (76/160/EEC) into conformity.

Mr. Grist: The authority is currently reviewing its programme of remedial works which aims to achieve compliance of all listed waters. The full cost of the programme has yet to be evaluated.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was his Department's response to the Countryside Commission's consultation papers "Paths, Routes and Trails" and "Changing the Rights of Way Network."

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office received copies of both papers but did not comment on either since it was neither necessary nor appropriate to do so.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas Resources

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will publish his next report on the development of the oil and the gas resources of the United Kingdom (the Brown Book).

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend has today published the latest edition of the "Brown Book", and has arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. The report gives a detailed account of oil and gas development during 1988.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the many answers given in statements and in reply to questions on this subject.

Penrhiwceiber

Q110. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to visit Penrhiwceiber.

International Sugar Organisation

Q188. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has concerning an offer by the French Government to provide free office accommodation and diplomatic immunity to the International Sugar Organisation if it moves from London to Paris; what benefits accrue to Britain from the location of the sugar, wheat, cocoa and coffee organisations in London; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards this matter; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I understand that the International Sugar Organisation is examining a number of locations, including proposals from France and other countries as well as alternative sites in London. Her Majesty's Government welcome the location of these organisations in London which reflects the merits of London as the leading international trading centre in these products. We already provide diplomatic immunity and rates concessions for these organisations as we do for all international organisations of similar standing.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 April.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 April.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the rules relating to the holding of Government debt by insurance companies and pension funds.

Mr. Lilley: I do not know which rules the hon. Member has in mind.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are in London and elsewhere and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Brooke: The number of support grades employed in the Treasury is 241; the number of vacancies in London and elsewhere are five and none respectively, of which two have existed for over one month and three have existed for over three months; there are no temporary appointments and 1 casual appointment; in 1988-89 about 49,500 hours overtime were worked in London and 1,600 hours overtime elsewhere.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Brooke: The number of support grades employed in the Treasury is 241; the number of vacancies is five, of which two have existed for over one month and three for over three months; there are no temporary appointments and one casual appointment; in 1988-89 about 49,500 hours of overtime were worked in London and about 1,600 hours overtime elsewhere.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many instances have been detected in his

Department of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetrated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 April 1989]: It is not the policy of the Treasury to make public details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure, since such information might be of assistance to potential attackers.

Capital Charges

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what level the interest elements of capital charges are set for public sector capital assets; how this figure is arrived at; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I assume my hon. Friend has in mind the returns the Government expect the public sector to earn on capital assets. I refer him to my statement on 5 April, at column 187.

Fees and charges for non-trading public bodies will normally be set to recover a cost of capital of not less than 6 per cent. in real terms. This is based on the real pre-tax costs of capital to a private sector company raising funds for low-risk purposes.

Trading bodies such as nationalised industries are required to earn a real rate of return of 8 per cent. on their new investment programmes as a whole. This is derived from the average pre-tax real rate of return achieved on assets in the private sector.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of properties owned by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and suitable for residential accommodation have been empty for (i) up to a year and (ii) over a year; and where these properties are located, by region of the United Kingdom or local authority area.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 April 1989]: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise does not own any property. Apart from a few properties which are provided by traders as a condition of the grant of privileges, the freehold or leasehold of all properties on the Department's estate is vested in the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Only one building on the estate can be regarded as suitable for residential accommodation. This is situated in the Isles of Scilly and has been vacant for almost one year pending the appointment of an officer to the post for which the accommodation is provided.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Education Needs

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the level of spending on special education needs, as a proportion of the education budget, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Butcher: Local authority current expenditure on special education was 4·23, 4·25 and 4·26 per cent. respectively of total local authority current expenditure on education in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Henry Mellish School, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will visit the Henry Mellish school, Nottingham, to speak to parents and children about the Government's education policies.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Education Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities in the course of compiling their strategic plans for further education under the requirements of the Education Reform Act and the guidance of his Department's circular 9/88, have sought and received advice from his Department.

Mr. Jackson: Representatives of 73 local education authorities have received advice on the preparation of their schemes for planning, funding and delegation under circular 9/88 at meetings with officers of the Department. A large number of authorities have also received advice over the telephone and in writing.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department employs a total of 140 staff in the support grades in London and Darlington, including 12 casual appointments. There are seven vacancies, all of which have existed for over three months. On average these staff work a total of 93 hours of overtime a week.

Language Teaching

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to encourage more teaching of the Russian language; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum will include a modern foreign language as a foundation subject at secondary level to be studied by all pupils between the ages of 11 and 16. Russian is among those modern foreign languages specified as eligible for inclusion in the national curriculum, within the framework of the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 3 March, at columns 338-39. Within this framework, my right hon. Friend is encouraging schools to offer a greater diversity of languages, including Russian, and we are providing education support grants for pilot projects in some local education authorities in England to promote the preparation and implementation of plans for language diversification.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of foreign language assistants, by subjects, in maintained schools for each year from 1978-79 to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers are as follows:

Year	French	German	Spanish	Italian	Russian	Total
1978-79	1,710	668	162	17	4	2,561
1979-80	1,783	718	187	16	4	2,708

1987-88	1,503	556	186	12	2	2,259
1988-89	1,371	539	163	7	2	2,082

Industry and Education (Links)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that representatives of the management and trade unions are treated equally in establishing links between industry and educational institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department welcomes the involvement of all sections of industry in the establishment of links with schools. The management of such links is for local determination; however, the DES guides for employees and schools on "Education at Work" recognise the role of trade unions in the workplace and the TUC's strong support for workplace activities for school pupils. The TUC is also involved in education through, for example, its participation in the school curriculum industry project, which is developing teaching material for schools and teacher training, and its work with the National Curriculum Council "Educating for Economic Awareness" initiative.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made on his plans for city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The CTC programme is making excellent progress. Kingshurst opened last year. The Nottingham and Teesside CTCs will open in September, with those in Bradford, Gateshead and Dartford together with the London school for performing arts and technology due to open in 1990. Further announcements will be made soon.

Disabled People

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to encourage more disabled people to become teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department's action campaign on teacher recruitment aims to encourage more potentially good teachers to join the profession, including disabled people. Teacher training institutions and employers would of course need to satisfy themselves that all entrants to the profession possess the mental and physical capacity for the demanding job of teaching.

Higher Education

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of students in higher education in (a) arts and humanities and (b) sciences in each year from 1978-79 to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: Readily available information is shown in the following table:

Home full-time students in higher education in Great Britain

Thousands

	Academic year beginning in
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Total all students of which	451·2	465·0	488·4	504·6	517·5	525·1	530·6	540·0	549·7
Arts	253·1	256·8	267·3	273·0	278·2	278·8	281·2	286·8	293·3
Sciences	198·1	208·2	221·1	231·5	239·3	246·3	249·4	253·1	256·5

Figures may not sum due to rounding.

Sciences are defined as medicine, engineering and technology, agriculture, science and professional and vocational studies while arts includes education, business and social studies, language, arts other than language and music, drama, art and design.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to shift the balance of public funding of higher education towards the tuition fee.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for the future funding of higher education.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Higher education funding councils and other interested bodies have today been sent a paper seeking views on proposals to increase the full-time undergraduate tuition fee met through mandatory awards from its 1989-90 level of £607 to £1,600 in 1990-91 and to introduce, from 1991-92, fees differentiated by the cost of groups of courses. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Music Education

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest available figure for the number of pupils in secondary schools to whom music education is available only upon the payment of fees.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available. The Education Reform Act prohibits charging for all tuition provided during school hours, with the sole exception of individual tuition in the playing of a musical instrument.

Paper (Recycling)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the recycling of paper; and what advice is given to schools and colleges on this.

Mr. Butcher: The statutory attainment targets for science in the national curriculum include a requirement for children to know that some waste materials can be recycled. The recycling of paper, and the use of recycled paper, by educational institutions is a matter for them and, as appropriate, their maintaining LEAs. I hope they will consider the matter sympathetically. The Department is currently considering the use of recycled paper for its own purposes.

Expenditure (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to make additional funds available for the Derbyshire county council's capital expenditure on education as a consequence of the recent visit of a delegation to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: As I said at the meeting on 6 April, the application of our normal criteria resulted in Derbyshire receiving 52 per cent. of its submitted plans for prescribed capital expenditure in 1989-90 compared with a national average for LEAs of 34 per cent. There are no extra resources over and above those notified for distribution to LEAs for the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money was spent per pupil in Derbyshire in (a) special education, (b) primary schools, (c) secondary schools and (d) tertiary education from each of the years from 1978-79 to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table:

Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil[2]

	Primary £	Secondary £	Special £
1978-79	340	490	n/a
1979-80	395	565	n/a
1980-81	500	705	2,445
1981-82	575	795	2,985
1982-83	635	870	3,305
1983-84	690	950	3,450
1984-85	730	1,020	3,855
1985-86	780	1,125	5,060
1986-87	875	1,305	5,495
1987-88	[3]990	1,530	6,220

[1] Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DoE and pupil number returns to DES.

[3] The figure for 1987-88 includes nursery school pupils.

Separate figures are not available for tertiary education which forms a part of further education.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will report on progress on monitoring, by ethnicity, applications to universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Universities Central Council on Admissions and the Polytechnic Central Admissions System will include an ethnicity question on application forms for candidates applying for full-time degree course places in autumn 1990.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on steps taken by his Department to secure improved access to higher education by people from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has made clear the priority it attaches to increasing participation in higher education, particularly from groups that are currently under-represented and it has taken a number of measures to that end. The Universities Central Council on Admissions and the Polytechnic Central Admissions System will include an ethnicity question on application forms for candidates applying for full-time degree course places in autumn 1990. In addition, my right hon. Friend announced on 12 April at column 528, the establishment of a national framework for the recognition of access courses for students who lack the traditional qualifications for entrance to higher education. Some access courses are specifically targeted at ethnic minorities and staff are funded under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

We are funding a number of projects which are investigating and developing ways of enhancing the provision of access courses. Initial teacher training institutions have also developed a range of courses specifically aimed at people from ethnic minorities which are designed to build on their previous experience.

All these measures should help to improve access to higher education for people from ethnic minorities.

Student Unions

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much has been spent on student unions in each of the last 10 years by (a) central Government and (b) local government expressed in (i) cost terms and (ii) real terms with 1979 = 100.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Andrwew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much his survey on student unions cost to compile

Mr. Jackson: As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 1 December 1988, at column 356, work on the survey was undertaken by a team of officials which includes student affairs among its normal responsibilities. This was supplemented, from 9 December, by overtime payments and part-time assistance, the total cost of which was £1,720.

TRANSPORT

Rotherhithe Tunnel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason a traffic census point was established at the north end of the Rotherhithe tunnel on the morning of 11 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is one of a number of sites being used for a traffic survey to collect data needed to develop proposals for improving the A13 trunk road in the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Newham.

Air Security

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has received a request for a meeting with the chairman and members of the board of Manchester international airport to discuss the introduction of an airports departure tax; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider revising the existing methods of funding security methods at airports; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will support measures to introduce the funding of security costs at Manchester international airport through the imposition of an airports departure tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received a letter from the chairman of Manchester Airport plc proposing the introduction of an airport departure tax and requesting a meeting to discuss the matter. He has replied as follows:

"Thank you for your letter of 22 March proposing a meeting to discuss your proposal for an Airport Departure Tax to finance aviation security.

This ground has been gone over many times in recent years. As you say, from 1978 to 1983 aviation security was financed through the aviation security fund, set up under the powers which are now contained in part IV of the Aviation Security Act 1982. This proved to be bureaucratic, complicated and costly to administer, with the Department collecting money from the industry with one hand and paying it out to it again with the other, and it provided little incentive to efficiency. Consequently, a review undertaken in 1982, at the request of the industry and in consultation with all sections of it, concluded that the financing of aviation security would be more straightforward, that unnecessary and complex procedures would be avoided, that incentives to carry out security measures effectively would be increased, and that cross-subsidisation would be eliminated, if the fund were abolished. The fund was wound up accordingly in 1983, and the airports and airlines became responsible for financing aviation security costs from their revenue, in exactly the same way as they meet other operating expenditure.

This arrangement has much to commend it. It is simple and logical, and it is consistent with the arrangements in other areas, such as aviation safety. It ensures that costs fall where they are incurred, and thus produce an incentive to avoid waste and inefficiency

The whole matter was reviewed again most thoroughly after the publication in 1986 of the House of Commons Transport Select Committee's report on airport security. It recommended that an aviation security fund should be re-established, and that it should be financed by a levy on passengers which should be clearly itemised on the ticket price. In their response to this report the Government rejected these recommendations, pointing out that the arguments against financing aviation security through a Government-administered fund were still as strong as when the original fund was wound up.

However, the response went on to say that, as some sections of the industry had recently proposed a variety of possible alternative arrangements, the Department would look at these suggestions further in consultation with the industry. This review was carried out through the National Aviation Security Committee, It examined in detail all the suggestions put forward, including some very similar to the arrangement you now seem to be proposing. It found that there was no widespread support for any of these schemes, and no grounds for believing that any of them would be more satisfactory overall than the present arrangements.

In connection with the various proposals put forward for some kind of airport departure tax the review noted that security costs are not necessarily directly proportional to the number of passengers passing through a particular airport. Consequently either such a tax would have to be set at different levels for each airport—in which case considerable accounting resources would need to be devoted each year to working out the appropriate level at which it should be set for the coming year at each of the 50 airports in the national aviation security programme and in checking that the money was being properly used; or the tax would have to be the same as each airport—which would involve virtually the same arrangements as did the aviation security fund for the Government collecting the money and paying it out again against authorised expenditure.

After considering the findings of the review, Ministers reaffirmed their belief that the current arrangements were the most satisfactory and effective ones possible and that they should not be changed. That remains our position, and I must tell the hon. Gentleman frankly that I can see no point in meeting him to discuss his proposal for a departure tax unless and until he can demonstrate that:

(a) it has substantial support within the industry as a whole;

(b) it would not suffer from the same disadvantages as did the aviation security fund or involve additional accounting resources; and

(c) it would be more satisfactory overall than the present arrangements.

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the imposition of a total ban on the carriage of personal radios on aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not just personal radios, but a whole range of portable electrical items, from pocket calculators, through electric shavers and hair driers, to lap top computers, which pose particular security problems.

A complete ban on the carriage of such items on aircraft is not practicable.

We have reinforced the advice to airports and airlines about the dangers, and instructed that such items should be examined particularly closely. Passengers will be prevented from retaining them in cases where the security staff are unable to satisfy themselves that they are harmless.

As the problem is an international one we have, as my right hon. Friend announced on 21 February, at columns 556-57, arranged for the International Civil Aviation Organisation to address the matter.

Flight Paths

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what actions he has taken, consequent to the air disaster on the M1 motorway adjacent to the east midlands airport, to review the rules and practices concerning the siting of residential, commercial, or industrial buildings and public transport facilities beneath, or adjacent to, the flight paths to and from airport runways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Department of the Environment circular 39/81, a copy of which is in the Library, already requires planning authorities to refer to the Civil Aviation Authority or the Ministry of Defence for advice details of proposed developments close to busy airports. The 1989 review of accident statistics relative to public safety zones will pay particular regard to roads and railways running through such zones.

Trunk Roads

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which stretches of road are currently subject to negotiation with Staffordshire county council on trunk road status; and whether he will require standards currently adopted by Stoke on Trent city council for principal roads to apply on roads which change to trunk road status.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are discussing with the county council proposals to trunk part of A500 and to detrunk parts of A34, A5 and A449 in Staffordshire. The improvement and maintenance of trunk roads is carried out to the Department's standards.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any recent representations seeking amendment of existing international marine law regarding the carriage and protection of dangerous chemicals at sea, in the light of the recent sinking in the English Channel of a tanker carrying toxic material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Following the recent incident in the English Channel I have received one representation seeking amendment to the international marine law. I have also received a number of suggestions on how the marine environment can be protected when such an incident occurs. Some of these have been foreshadowed by the International Maritime Organisation and will become part of the regulatory regime in the near future.

A6 (M) Bypass

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report of the inspector on the proposed route of the Stockport north-south A6 (M) bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The inspector's report is being considered. We hope to announce a decision soon.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. Nowhere.

Roads (Financing)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish a consultative paper on the private financing of roads.

Mr. Portillo: Shortly.

Midland Mainline Electrification

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about the midland mainline electrification.

Mr. Portillo: The midland main line already has a good service which is being improved. It is for British Rail to consider whether the very large cost of electrifying the line would be justified by operating improvements and revenue gains, and to put forward a case if it believes it to be worthwhile. The completion of the single European market in 1992 is unlikely to have a significant effect on this essentially business decision.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has completed his review of the operation of the orange badge scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The review raised many complex issues. We are grateful to all those who commented, and in particular for the report from the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC). A copy of its report has been placed in the Library.

The rate at which badges are issued has increased rapidly since 1986. Between March 1986 and March 1988, the number of badges rose from about 800,000 to about 1 million. The scheme is losing the respect of the general public, who see apparently able-bodied people using cars bearing badges. Without changes the scheme will become unworkable.

The parking concessions provided by the scheme are essential to those with the greatest mobility problems. We propose to accept the DPTAC's main recommendation —that eligibility for badges should be more closely related to eligibility for mobility allowance. This will concentrate badges on those severely disabled people who need them most.

We intend to hold further discussions with organisations representing people with disabilities, the British Medical Association and local authority associations to establish ways in which the new eligibility criteria can be introduced and to explore the implications for the financing of the scheme.

Badges will continue to be issued automatically to people receiving mobility allowance, or using a vehicle supplied by a Government Department or getting a grant towards their own vehicle and to registered blind people.

We propose to introduce a redesigned passport-type badge which will be more robust and will incorporate space for a photograph of the holder. The new badge will be designed to reduce abuse of the scheme and to make it clear that it is for the personal use of the badge holder. We shall be consulting on the design and wording of the new badge.

The DPTAC proposed that the two-hour limit on parking on yellow lines should be removed completely or, at the very least, extended to four hours. Such an extension could lead to problems of traffic management and increase congestion, given the number of badges currently on issue. We propose to discuss with local authority associations and the police extending the limit to three hours and providing more designated spaces for parking by people with mobility handicaps.

I have today written to the four central London authorities asking them to explore with the DPTAC the scope for introducing some elements of the scheme in those parts of central London where it does not at present apply. This could do much to give disabled people greater mobility in central London.

We propose further measures to simplify the operation of the scheme. In particular, these would:

(a) make recipients of war pensioners' mobility supplement automatically eligible for badges.
(b) permit the issue of badges for the same period as mobility allowance and war pensioners' mobility supplement. for those in receipt of those allowances, up to a maximum of five years. Other badges would continue to be reviewed at three-yearly intervals.
(c) allow local authorities to introduce four-hour time limits in on-street parking bays reserved for disabled people, where local authorities wish to encourage the use of such bays by shoppers rather than for all-day parking.
(d) encourage local authorities to warn badgeholders who are misusing badges prior to considering withdrawing the badge, and to issue renewal reminders. Many authorities do this already.

Further possible changes to the scheme were aired in the discussion paper, or suggested in response to it. We believe that other aspects of the scheme should continue as they are. In particular, we consider that registered blind people should continue to qualify automatically for badges and that otherwise eligibility should be restricted to those with the most severe mobility problems. We must protect the value of the orange badge if it is to be of real help to those who need it most.

Validity of orange badges which are already issued will not be affected by the proposals. Badge holders will be assessed under new criteria only when their current badges have expired and following introduction of the new criteria. Badges are reviewed every three years.

The Department has produced a leaflet in the traffic topics series explaining in more detail the proposals and the background to them. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Vehicle Inspectorate Plan

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the vehicle inspectorate executive agency business plan for 1989-90 will be published.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The business plan has been published today. Copies are available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Turbines (Rivers)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many privately operated electricity generating turbines are installed on rivers in Northern Ireland; and which Government Department has responsibility for permitting and overseeing their operation.

Mr. Viggers: No central register of privately operated electricity generating turbines is held by Northern Ireland Government Departments and thus the information sought is not available.

No one Government Department has overall responsibility for privately operated electricity generating turbines on rivers. The Northern Ireland Departments of Agriculture, Environment and Economic Development have statutory responsibilities for installations affecting the flow in a particular watercourse for water abstraction and for health and safety at work considerations arising from the operation of such turbines.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origin of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he has taken to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment at his Department.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Within Northern Ireland religious affiliation is a more significant consideration for equality of opportunity than ethnic origin. The Northern Ireland Civil Service therefore records details of religious affiliation together with sex (and disabilities if any) of applicants. It does not monitor the ethnic origin of staff nor has it any plans to do so.

The home Civil Service conducted a programme of ethnic origin surveys over four years, covering all staff, and these surveys were completed in June 1988. The Northern Ireland Office in London took part in these surveys.

The Northern Ireland Office continues to monitor staff as they join and to update its records. The home Civil Service and the Northern Ireland Civil Service are fully committed to ensuring equality of opportunity for all applicants including any from ethnic minorities.

The Northern Ireland Office is an equal opportunity employer and this is emphasised in all our recruiting campaigns and advertising.

Promotion opportunities are open to all our staff and in all cases the promotion is gained on merit. No specific steps have been taken to recruit ethnic minorities to top grades.

Agriculture Improvement Scheme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount, in grants, paid out by the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, under the agriculture improvement scheme in each of the years since 1985 to applicants from each of the parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is not available by parliamentary constituency. It has been given by county.

Job Creation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the number of jobs promoted by the Industrial Development Board and its predecessor, the Department of Commerce, for (a) indigenous firms and (b) overseas firms in Northern Ireland since 1978-79; how many of these jobs are the result of (i) new enterprise or (ii) expansion; what is the average cost per job; and how many of these jobs promoted were actually realised;

(2) how many jobs have been promoted by the Industrial Development Board or its predecessor the Department of Commerce in the following industrial groups (a) engineering, (b) textiles, clothing and leather, (c) food, drink and tobacco and (d) all other industries; what was the average cost of each job promoted; and how many of these jobs were actually realised.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 21 April 1989]: Job promotion figures for the period April 1978 to December 1988 inclusive are as follows:

	Job promotions
	Indigenous firms		Overseas firms
	New	Expansions	New	Expansions	Total
Department of Commerce
1978-79	357	1,204	4,165	1,364	7,090

Total	3,524	13,914	12,207	19,462	49,107

In this period offers of assistance have been made with the intention of safeguarding employment as well as promoting new jobs. In such cases the assistance offered is not disaggregated between various job categories and consequently it is not possible to identify separately the average cost per job promoted. The average cost for all jobs assisted during 1987-88 was £9,362. Job realisation figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representations he has received about the denial of human rights or the use of torture in Northern Ireland; and which organisations made these representations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I receive representations on a wide range of matters but no central record is kept of those which allege denial of human rights in Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Playgrounds

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what correspondence he has received from Nithsdale road link-up group expressing concern about supervision of children in school playgrounds; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from the Nithsdale road link-up group and many other expressions of concern from parents and parents' groups about the absence or inadequacy of playground supervision in education authority schools generally.

Local arrangements for playground supervision are for education authorities, who have a duty of care at common law for pupils at their schools. The Government share the concern of parents that children should be properly cared for, and have made provision of £4 million within total education provision for 1989-90 to enable authorities to discharge their duty in this matter.

A new clause—which would have the effect of putting a statutory duty on authorities to provide adequate levels of supervision of pupils—has been tabled for discusion by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) in the Committee which is currently considering the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Bill. The hon. Gentleman may wish to attend the public gallery to listen to the debate.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, when evaluating contracts in competitive tendering of ancillary services, the cost of redundancy and early retirement is set against the private tender.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. Redundancy payments are real costs to the Health Service and boards are specifically instructed to have regard to them in the final assessment of all bids relating to competitive tendering. Similarly premature retirement costs, if any, are also required to be taken into account.

Press Releases

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many press releases have been issued by himself, his Minister of State and each of his Parliamentary Under-Secretaries since June 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: The total number of news releases issued by the Scottish Information Office in the period 1 June 1987 to 31 March 1989 covering the activities of myself and my ministerial colleagues was 2,078. The number issued on behalf of each Minister was as follows:

	Number
Secretary of State for Scotland	561
Minister of State (Commons)	426
Minister of State (Lords)	238
Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment	331
Minister for Education and Health	522

Highland Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, why a separate meeting was held with the manager and chairman of Highland health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: To discuss matters of common interest.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office (including Scottish Prison Service) position at 1 April 1989 is as follows:

a. 318·5;
b. 26, of which 20 had existed for over one month and 14 for over 3 months;
c. 7·5 (all casual appointments);
d. since May 1988 overtime hours worked amount to 1,097 (London) and 28,762 (elsewhere).

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Forest Workers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the numbers of forest workers employed on forest management activities and harvesting activities by the Forestry Commission in each conservancy area since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the following tables:

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department gave to Nirex which enabled Dounreay to be placed on the short list as a possible site for the disposal of radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The decision by Nirex to include Dounreay on the short list of sites for investigation was taken as a result of their own site selection procedure. I am not aware of any information provided by the Scottish Development Department which was material to this decision.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has made any predictions of the economic effects upon the local economy of Caithness should Dounreay be chosen by Nirex for the disposal of solid low and intermediate-level radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The economic effects would depend on the nature of any disposal facility which might be established. As a basic guide Nirex has suggested that, if construction were phased, some 350 jobs on construction and operation would be created during the 50-year operational life of the repository, without taking account of associated secondary employment.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was his Department's response to the Countryside Commission's consultation papers "Paths, Routes and Trails" and "Changing the Rights of Way Network".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No response has been made as the papers relate specifically to the situation in England and Wales.

Renaval Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail any recent applications, made by the Scottish Office, for financial assistance from the European Community by way of the Renaval fund which is designed to provide assistance to those communities which have suffered a decline in their shipbuilding and marine engineering industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 April 1989]: Applications under Renaval are currently under consideration and should go forward very shortly to the European Commission.

Employment Training

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the local authorities in Scotland which are training agents or training managers for employment training.

DEFENCE

Air Crash (Pembrokeshire)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the findings of the inquiry into the air crash on 6 May 1988 near Solva St. Davids, Pembrokeshire, involving an RAF aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: I believe that my hon. Friend may be referring to the accident to a Royal Air Force Hawk aircraft which took place shortly after take off from RAF Brawdy on 13 May 1988. The board of inquiry into this accident is now complete and a summary of its findings will be published shortly. I will send a copy to my hon. Friend.

Gamma Shine

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the phenomenon of gamma shine and its implications for the safety of naval personnel;

(2) what studies have been carried out into the possible hazardous effects of gamma shine; and if he will place such reports in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the context of submarine nuclear reactors, gamma shine is the term used to refer to the gamma radiation emitted by fission products contained within the vessel in the unlikely event of an accident. The hazardous effects of gamma radiation are well known and are documented in numerous published reports.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) why the Clyde area public safety scheme was revised in May 1985 and the gamma shine maximum hazard distance increased from 50 to 250m; and why the Scottish special safety scheme was similarly revised;

(2) if he will list the date of the latest revision of the special safety schemes at all ports with Z berths; and if he will state in each case the recommendations for dealing with gamma shine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All public and special safety schemes lay down a distance within which automatic countermeasures would be taken against radiation hazards, including gamma shine, in the event of an accident. Monitoring equipment is in place at every berth visited by nuclear powered submarines, either permanently or for the duration of the visit, in order to detect and quantify any radiation hazard. The countermeasures are designed to ensure that radiation dose rates to personnel do not exceed the limits set by the National Radiological Protection Board for nuclear accidents. Specific measures may vary depending on the circumstances of each particular berth; they include sheltering and/or evacuation.

In addition, some safety schemes give an estimate of the extent of the hazard from gamma shine in the event of an accident. In all cases this is less than the distance within which automatic countermeasures would be taken. The estimates contained in the Clyde public safety scheme and the Scottish special safety scheme were revised in the light of NRPB recommendations in 1985, but no change to the planned countermeasures was required.

The dates of the most recent revisions of public and special safety schemes for ports with Z berths are as follows.

	Dates
Portsmouth Special Safety Scheme	October 1988
Southampton Special Safety Scheme	February 1988
Devon Public Safety Scheme	September 1988
Barrow Public Safety Scheme	August 1988
Barry and Cardiff Special Safety Scheme	September 1988
Liverpool Special Safety Scheme	December 1988
Torbay Special Safety Scheme	August 1988
Scotland Special Safety Scheme	August 1988
Clyde Public Safety Scheme	July 1988
Currently under revision
Portland Special Safety Scheme	August 1988
Rosyth Public Safety Scheme	March 1986

Lance Missile

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from his United States counterpart concerning the length of time required to modernise the Lance missile; and what assessment he has made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his answer, 20 April 1989, c. 279]: The US Administration has kept allies fully informed about their development programme for a successor to the Lance missile. The selection by the US of a launcher at the end of last year was geared to having a new system available for deployment by the mid-1990s.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will press the European Commission to introduce equivalent standards for egg producers as those now pertaining in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on measures being taken to ensure equality of competition between European egg producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 April at column 51 and the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 20 April at column 280.

My Department has supported the EC Commission's initiative in proposing measures to deal with a range of zoonoses, including salmonella, on a Communitywide basis, and is contributing constructively to ensure that progress is as rapid as possible.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department does not use any of the printers specified.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the working of the Potato Marketing Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make an announcement on the result of the Potato Marketing Board review.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 19 April at column 175.

Pesticides

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the pesticides for which there are international safety limits; and if he will indicate in each case whether the safety limit is accepted by his Department and what action is taken to see that the limit is invariably observed.

Mr. Ryder: International acceptable daily intakes for pesticide residues are published by the codex alimentarius commission of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation and the World Health Organisation. The United Kingdom accepts these unless there are sound scientific reasons for not doing so. Our approval procedures take ADIs into account; we have a range of maximum residue levels which, while they are not themselves safety limits, must be toxicologically acceptable; and regular monitoring of pesticide residues in food provides a check that MRLs—and hence ADIs—are not being exceeded.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the pesticides used on food are used in order to (a) preserve the food or prolong the shelf life, (b) improve the appearance and (c) increase the yield of the crop.

Mr. Ryder: It is not possible to provide the information requested. All agricultural pesticides, including herbicides are used with the ultimate aim of producing good quality marketable produce with minimal crop losses.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department was informed by his United States counterpart of the concern in the United States of America, about the apple spray Alar; what action he took following the receipt of information; and when he did so.

Mr. Ryder: Officials in my Department received information about the United States Environmental Protection Agency's action on daminozide (marketed as Alar) on 9 February 1989. On 10 February they requested all available data from the manufacturer and supplier, including the studies submitted to the EPA, in order to carry out an emergency review. The data have been supplied and have been considered by independent experts on the advisory committee on pesticides, whose conclusions will shortly be made public.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence of safety was considered by the advisory committee on pesticides when, in 1980, it approved the apple spray Alar.

Mr. Ryder: The advisory committee on pesticides considered an application for clearance of daminozide, the active ingredient of Alar products, in 1967. The application was supported by a full toxicological, residue and environmental data package according to the standards of the time.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the response of his Department to the European Economic Community directive which would compel retailers to inform customers of the pesticides used on the fruit and vegetables they sell.

Mr. Ryder: While I am in favour of informative labelling of food there are a number of technical problems that will arise if the European Commission's proposal is implemented. The United Kingdom delegation has therefore expressed some reservations in the discussions which have taken place to date.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to prevent retailers from selling fruit and vegetables which have pesticide residues which are above international safety limits.

Mr. Ryder: I am not aware of any international safety limits for pesticide residues on fruit and vegetables. However the Government brought into force on 1 January this year a wide range of maximum residue levels for pesticides in foodstuffs. These take account of acceptable daily intakes for individual chemicals published by the codex alimentarius commission as described in my reply earlier today.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticides are known to be used on food; and which of these are thought to be the most dangerous if excessive residues remain.

Mr. Ryder: Of the 400 or so active ingredients currently approved for use in the United Kingdom, some two thirds do not leave detectable residues. Ministers in six Government Departments must be satisfied that usage will not result in residue levels likely to pose a hazard to health before any pesticide is approved for use.

Consumer Pressure Groups

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the number of consumer pressure groups which have an interest in food and on how they are financed; and if the Government make a financial contribution to any of these groups.

Mr. Ryder: Because of our statutory requirement to consult on proposals for regulations under the Food Act 1984, I am aware of up to 100 organisations which broadly represent consumer interests and have an interest in food matters. I have no detailed information on how they are financed.

The Government wholly fund the National Consumer Council, the Welsh Consumer Council, the Scottish Consumer Council, the Consumers in the European Community Group and the headquarters organisations of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland. It also makes a contribution to the funding of the National Federation of Consumer Groups. All this funding is for consumer interests in general and is not specifically related to food issues.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider providing financial resources to recognised food consumer groups to permit them to carry out independent food testing similar to that carried out in the United States of America by the Natural Resources Defence Council.

Mr. Ryder: My Ministry already carries out an extensive programme of food surveillance and I am satisfied that this, together with local authority enforcement of legislative requirements, is entirely adequate to protect the interests of the consumer.

Apple Juice

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the processed apple juices on sale in the United Kingdom that have been made from apples sprayed with Alar.

Mr. Ryder: This information is not held by my Department.

Surplus Food

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when there is to be a further distribution of European Community surplus food; if applications will be invited from old people's welfare groups, charities and similar bodies to distribute the food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: When the EC surplus food scheme was introduced in 1988 certain charitable and non-profit making organisations were designated to operate the scheme both in 1988 and in 1989. My officials have recently consulted these organisations about the quantities of beef and butter they wish to distribute in 1989 and are currently considering each bid against the United Kingdom's budget of about £14·8 million to operate the scheme in 1989. We expect to be contacting designated organisations again shortly with details of their allocations. Once tendering, processing and packaging arrangements have then been made, produce will be made available for distribution.

Salmonella

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give, by each local authority area, the number of poultry keepers who have had hens culled because of salmonella and the number of hens culled in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not my Department's policy to divulge information which could be used to deduce the identity of individual flock owners who have had hens culled or whose flocks have been compulsorily slaughtered because of salmonella. This risk would be inherent if the information were supplied by each local authority area as requested.

The following tables set out the information for the United Kingdom as a whole.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to exclude from the calculation of entitlement to family credit and income support, the receipt of child benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Provision is already made in income support for children's requirements. In family credit the support for children is the total of child benefit and the child credit rates. Thus in both schemes to ignore child benefit would mean double provision.

Transitional Additions (Dumbarton)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants were awarded a transitional addition in the Dumbarton social security region in April 1988; and how many will as a result receive in April (a) reduced uprating and (b) no uprating;

(2) how many claimants in Dumbarton constituency were awarded a transitional addition in April 1988; and how many of these will as a result receive in April 1989 (a) reduced uprating and (b) no uprating;

(3) what percentage of (a) pensioners, (b) persons in receipt of a disability premium, (c) single parents, (d) unemployed married, (e) unemployed single, (f) unemployed with children and (g) others in receipt of income support in Dumbarton constituency will receive no increase in their benefit payments as a result of the current year's uprating because of the effect of transitional additions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March, at column 445.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage payments were made in 1986; and if he will categorise these according to the age of the child, when vaccination took place, the year of the vaccination and the nature of the vaccination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Fifteen payments were awarded in 1986 under the provisions of the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979. Details are in the table.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for (i) Great Britain as a whole, (ii) the north-east region and (iii) each of the four offices serving the Bradford metropolitan area, for the financial year 1988-89.

HEALTH

NHS Reform

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from general practitioners in Bolton and other areas in the north-west about proposals for reform of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a number of representations from GPs from Bolton and the north-west, including some passed on to me by my hon. Friend.

14. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider withdrawing the proposals on self-governing trusts contained within "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

15. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals within the National Health Service are currently in a position to provide a complete price list of all their treatments, operations and investigatory services; and how many will be required to do so by April 1991 in order to fulfil the terms of the Government's White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Roger Freeman: The current level of information about costs varies from hospital to hospital. A key element of our programme of reform is to provide all 260 major acute hopitals with the computerised systems they need to manage their resources more effectively. By April 1991 significant progress in implementing these new systems will have been made at a number of sites. However, the timetable for reform set out in the White Paper will not require any hospital to be in a position then to cost each of its services at the level of detail suggested by my hon. Friend's question.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from overprescribing doctors in connection with the National Health Service review.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received many representations from many doctors. I regret to say that it is not possible to distinguish between those from doctors who overprescribe and those from doctors who do not. The review will ensure that all doctors will always be able to prescribe all necessary medicines to patients.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters his Department has received since 1

January concerning the Government's approach to the National Health Service; and what proportion of these letters has been congratulatory.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received 3,500 representations about our proposals in "Working For Patients", expressing a wide range of questions and views which I shall take into account as part of the process of implementation. Many are broadly supportive, but it would not be possible, except at disproportionate cost, to establish the proportion which are congratulatory and those which are not. I am more interested in constructive comments than in congratulations or political opposition.

66. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from general practitioners following the publication of his White Paper "Working for Patients;" and of these, how many contained requests for further details on the proposals contained therein.

Mr. Mellor: We have received some 1,200 representations from general practitioners, many asking questions. Information on the numbers requesting further details rather than expressing views is not available.

59. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider introducing a pilot scheme for indicative drug budgets before going ahead with the proposals in "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 21 March, at column 562.

45. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received from general practitioners about the proposals for practice management in the National Health Service review.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We continue to receive representations from general practitioners expressing a wide range of views. We shall take these carefully into account as the implementation process goes forward.

41. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contribution general practitioners are making in explaining to patients the National Health Service review proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some general practitioners are giving their patients a fair description of the benefits which will result from the White Paper proposals. I have also received representations from some GPs who are plainly misleading their patients particularly by use of BMA leaflets and causing unnecessary anxieties to old and sick people. I regret this and I am taking all possible steps to correct it. I have written to all general practitioners to set the record straight and to refute the inaccuracies contained in the BMA leaflet. I hope that all responsible general practitioners will respond by entering into constructive discussion of my proposals and by ceasing to cause unnecessary concern to their patients.

35. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of the British Medical Association to discuss the White Paper "Working for Patients"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have had three meetings with the general medical services committee on the remuneration of general practitioners and I will have another meeting if it requests one. I will be meeting the joint consultants committee, which includes representatives of the BMA, tomorrow. I look forward to hearing that committee's views on the review proposals. The British Medical Association has not formally put any views on the review to me, although I have read its leaflets and pamphlets.

33. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the south-west concerning the proposed changes for general practitioners contained in the "Working for Patients" document.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a number of representations from the south-west, as from the rest of the country. Many are supportive of the proposals.

22. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received recent representations from the Medical Practitioners' Union about reform of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am not aware of any such representations.

20. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received recently from doctors and other medical professions concerning his White Paper on the Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a wide range of comments from doctors and other medical staff and shall take them carefully into account as the process of implementation goes forward.

18. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the recent representations he has received from family practitioners about his White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a wide range of comments from family practitioners and shall take them carefully into account as the process of implementation goes forward.

British Medical Association

16. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the British Medical Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met members of the general medical services committee on 20 March to discuss the proposed new contract for general practitioners.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the British Medical Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met him formally on 22 February, when I discussed with him the remuneration of hospital doctors in the light of the Government's decisions on the nineteenth report of the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body.

65. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet the British Medical Association; and what he expects to discuss.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley).

25. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to answer the British Medical Association leaflet being distributed through doctors' surgeries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I disapprove strongly of the BMA leaflet which grossly misrepresents the Government's proposals. It is inaccurate and misleading and I believe could cause unnecessary and unjustified alarm to more vulnerable patients. I have therefore written to all GPs to set the record straight on the BMA's five key untrue allegations.

1. None of my proposed reforms will result in doctors running out of money, leaving them unable to prescribe for ill patients.

2. The Government's intention to reward doctors who deliver high quality care to an average list of patients will not reduce the time given to patients when they need it. Doctors who choose to have more patients will need to be available for longer hours than their colleagues with small lists. However, the contract encourages new services and higher performance rather than bigger lists. Patients will not move to doctors who have little time to see them.

3. No hospital is being encouraged to opt out of the NHS nor to reduce the range of services provided. All essential local services will be safeguarded by the DHA's legal powers and duty to require local delivery of them.

4. The Government do not wish to save money by doctors taking the cheapest option. They wish to ensure that, within the resources available, more patients receive high quality care. Doctors who are given more choice and control over resources will make judgments over quality of care more than cost.

5. The commitment of the Government to the NHS is absolute and will remain so. However, after 40 years, it is sensible to seek ways of improving the way in which its huge and growing resources are used.

I will continue to take every opportunity to set out an accurate account of my proposals and to try to engage members of the medical profession in serious discussion of them.

General Practitioners

17. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners have indicated their intention of resigning their contracts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am aware that some local medical committees have discussed the question of resignation, but very few indeed of the letters I have received refer to this possibility.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of people registered with each doctor under the National Health Service in each year since 1959.

Mr. Mellor: The average number of patients on general medical practitioners' lists in England for each year since 1959 is:

	Number
1959	2,380
1960	2,385
1961	2,388

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what prior consultations were held with the medical profession before the publication of the new contract proposals for doctors in general practice.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I remember the need for a more performance-related contract for GPs being a widespread subject of discussion with members of the medical profession about six or seven years ago. The need for a new contract for general medical practitioners was first set out formally by the Government in the Green Paper "Primary Health Care: An Agenda for Discussion", published in April 1986. Eight months public consultation with the medical profession resulted in the proposals for a new contract set out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" published in November 1987.

Detailed discussions of the proposed new contract with the general medical services committee, which negotiates for GPs, began in March 1988. Between March 1988 and the publication by the GMSC of its account of the negotiating position and my publication of "A New Contract", my officials held 17 meetings lasting 80 hours with the GMSC. I also held two meetings personally with the negotiators before publication and a third, protracted one afterwards. Subsequent meetings between my officials and the GMSC have taken the total time spent on detailed negotiations past 100 hours.

The GMSC is now consulting its local medical committees and has summoned a conference for 27 April 1989. I wait to see whether it will wish to resume constructive discussions after the conference. In the meantime my officials are now preparing amendments to the regulations governing the GM services, including amendment to GPs' terms of service, and revised sections of the statement of fees and allowances (which sets out GPs' entitlement to those payments).

The new contract will not reduce the average remuneration of GPs. It will however result in good GPs —those who provide all the services that patients need, attract patients to their practices and achieve high levels of performance—being paid more. This will be achieved by redistribution of existing levels of remuneration enhanced by increased investment in the family practitioner services as promised in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health".

I believe that the GMSC agrees that the existing contract should be changed and that the changes should be introduced with effect from 1 April 1990. I hope, therefore, that the longest, most protracted, detailed and painstaking discussion of amendments to a contract in which I have ever been involved will soon come to an end. Both sides are agreed that our sole aim is to provide incentives to and fair reward for good quality primary health care and that publicly professed agreement should assist in any further discussions.

47. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the response which he has received from general practitioners to his proposals for a new contract.

56. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in the last 12 months on the subject of general practitioners' contracts.

57. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the British Medical Association's campaign against the proposed general practitioners' contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since the publication of "General Practice in the NHS—A New Contract" on 23 February, I have received about 800 letters from individual GPs and their representative organisations. Prior to 23 February discussions on the GPs' contract with the GPs' representatives, the general medical service committee, were confidential.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in negotiations with the general medical services committee over a new contract for general practitioners since his publication of the Government's proposals on 23 February; and whether any of the outstanding issues have been settled.

48. Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards settling general practitioners' contracts.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friends to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Fylde (Mr. Jack), for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) and for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) earlier today.

32. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to replace the General Medical Council with an independent body to investigate ethical complaints against general practitioners.

Mr. Freeman: The General Medical Council is an independent statutory body whose constitution and functions are regulated by the Medical Act 1983. Under this legislation the council has power to provide advice for members of the medical profession on standards of professional conduct and on medical ethics and to discipline doctors found guilty of serious professional misconduct. There are no plans to change existing arrangements.

26. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to make any amendments to the draft general practitioners' contract.

Mr. Mellor: The proposals set out in "A New Contract" are based on a year's intensive discussions with the general medical services committee negotiators. The principles are now settled but there will be plenty of opportunity to consider amendments to the detail as we proceed with the preparation of amendments to regulations and the statement of fees and allowances.

23. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed level of capitation supplements in rural areas for rural general practitioner practices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I propose that general practitioners should receive a rural capitation supplement to their basic practice allowance for each patient on their list who lives in a sparsely populated area. I envisaged three payments, the highest being for patients in the most sparsely populated areas. The amounts of these payments has not yet been decided.

Community Care

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he now expects to make a statement on his response to the Griffiths report.

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement about the Government's response to Sir Roy Griffiths' report "Agenda for Action".

Mr. Mellor: We remain committed to a policy of promoting the development of community services so that people can return to, or remain in, the community and live as independently as possible, wherever this is best for them. We are currently giving active consideration to the future organisation and management of community care following Sir Roy Griffiths' report and hope to be in a position to bring forward our own proposals in the near future.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received (a) generally in favour and (b) opposed to the main principles of the Griffiths report; and if he will now make a statement on the Government's intentions with regard to these recommendations.

Mr. Mellor: The representations we have received contain a wide and varied range of views on the Griffiths report. We shall take all reactions into account in framing our own proposals, which we hope to be in a position to bring forward in the near future.

64. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to introduce changes in the reorganisation and delivery of community care.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 6 April, at column 291.

62. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase support services for carers.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has, for a number of years, grant-aided national voluntary organisations directly concerned with the needs of carers. In 1988-89 these grants totalled nearly £¼ million. Total grant-aid to the voluntary sector by the Department now exceeds £36 million per annum, a substantial proportion of which is directed at organisations providing services for sick, elderly and disabled people and their carers. I have recently approved a grant of £150,000 for a carers training project and we have provided funding of £19,000 for an information pack about carers' services to accompany a forthcoming BBC local radio series. Under our helping the community to care programme we have made available £10·2 million for projects to support people looking after sick, disabled and elderly people in the community, including £¼ million to the King's Fund informal caring support unit and £1·8 million to develop services for carers in three demonstration districts in Sandwell, Stockport and East Sussex. We are also funding a programme of research on carers at the university of York and have commissioned some further analysis of the carers data from the 1985 general household survey which, together with data emerging form the OPCS surveys of disability, will inform decisions about the future planning of community care policies.

44. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to meet the organisation MIND to discuss Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

Mr. Mellor: We are currently giving active consideration to the future organisation and management of community care following Sir Roy Griffiths' report. We hope to be in a position to bring forward our proposals in the near future and will consider requests for meetings from the organisations involved at that stage.

Ladywell Hospital, Eccles

24. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will pay a visit to Ladywell hospital in Eccles.

Mr. Freeman: I have no plans to make such a visit in the near future.

Patients (Mixing)

27. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring is undertaken by his Department of the numbers of mixing of elderly physically frail patients and elderly mentally ill patients.

Mr. Freeman: It is departmental policy that there should be separate services for elderly physically frail patients and elderly mentally ill patients. But where elderly people have multiple disabilities they are likely to be in the sort of facility best placed to meet their major need. The provision of services is the responsibility of the district health authority concerned. Overall levels of provision are monitored through the regional review process and through the Health Advisory Service programme of visits.

Eyesight Testing

28. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he is giving to the introduction of a low-cost private eye test.

Mr. Mellor: We are presently considering comments from professional and other interested bodies on a proposal that in the case of private sight tests a patient, under certain circumstances, will be able to choose to have a vision only test to determine whether spectacles are required. No decision on the proposal has yet been reached.

68. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning his Department's proposals relating to sight testing.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 13 April to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise), at column 699.

30. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health of he will make a statement on the levels of prices being charged for eyesight testing.

Mr. Mellor: Indications are that fees for private sight tests range between £7 and £15, though one chain of opticians is offering sight tests for old age pensioners at £2·50. Some opticians I understand who are charging about £10 are offering package deals which may give a discount on glasses if these are bought at the branch where the sight test takes place.

NHS (Private Laboratories)

29. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the consequences of the increasing use of private sector laboratory facilities within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 21 March 1989, at column 893.

Nurses

31. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses there are at present; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 21 March, at column 567.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to encourage the private health care sector to increase its contribution to nurse training.

Mr. Mellor: I am pleased to announce that representatives of the private sector, the English National Board and the Department have recently established a joint working group to identify the extent of the private sector's capacity to participate in pre-registration nurse training. The group will also identify the sector's demand for post-registration nurses and its capacity to provide an input consistent with its capacity to train, and its demand for, staff.

GP Drug Lists

34. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policies for general practitioner drug lists.

50. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy towards general practitioner drug lists.

Mr. Mellor: We are encouraging the continued development of voluntary local formularies (locally agreed lists of drugs which would normally be prescribed in the majority of cases) as a means of achieving more effective and economical prescribing by general medical practitioners. Formularies might cover a single practice, a group of practices or a family practitioner committee area. As we stated in working paper number 4, "Indicative Prescribing Budgets for General Medical Practitioners", it will be a responsibility of regional health authorities to encourage the development of joint formularies between FPCs and district health authorities.

West Midlands RHA

36. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority; and whether the question of hospital trusts was discussed.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority, together with the chairmen of all other regional health authorities, on 14 and 15 March. NHS hospital trusts were among the many questions that we discussed.

Asset Registers

37. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what practical and financial assistance he proposes to offer to health authorities in the compilation of asset registers.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities have been given details of the pilot studies of asset recording as noted in paragraph 4.2 of working paper No. 5 "Capital Charges" together with details of asset register software which is available to them free of charge. The Department is forming a capital charges unit, headed by an experienced and professionally qualified financial manager seconded from the NHS, which will be available to advise authorities.

Speech Therapists

38. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the extent of control over professional and budgetary matters available to speech therapists under the White Paper "Working for Patients" proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The White Paper proposals apply to all branches of the professional services delivered by the National Health Service. The question is too vague to permit any precise answer at this stage.

Health Authorities (Insurance)

39. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards enabling health authorities to insure themselves against risk.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities follow the practice of Government Departments, which normally do not insure unless it would be more economical for them to do so than to carry the risks themselves. This long-standing arrangement is something authorities take into account in deciding what provision for contingencies should be made in their financial plans.

Waiting List Fund

40. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources have been allocated for 1989-90 to the waiting list fund; and of this what proportion will be allocated direct to regional health authorities.

Mr. Mellor: The sum of £31 million will be made available through the waiting list fund in 1989-90. Of this, £25·3 million has already been allocated to regional and special health authorities to fund projects aimed at reducing the time patients have to wait for hospital treatment. The remaining £5·7 million will be targeted, through regions, at health districts with particular waiting problems.

Acute Hospital Beds (West Midlands)

42. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute hospital beds there are in the West Midlands regional health authority and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table. The number of in-patient cases treated per available bed has increased from 28 in 1979 to 42 in the financial year 1987-88.

Average daily available acute beds, West Midlands regional health authority, 1979 and 1987-88

1987-88	13,179	550,698

Prepared Foods

43. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the regulations governing the preparation and distribution of the products of the prepared food industry; and if, as a matter of urgency, he will discuss this with representatives of the industry.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of the Food Act 1984, together with the food hygiene regulations, made the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970 and the Food Hygiene (Markets, Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966, as amended, apply to the preparation and distribution of food products. The wider application of storage temperature controls in the food hygiene regulations, including those required for delivery vehicles, is currently being considered and revised draft regulations will be issued for consultation shortly. Food industry concerns will be included in this exercise.

Prescriptions

46. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to modify the costs of prescriptions for those with incomes above income support level.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have maintained the wide-ranging exemptions from prescription charges under which more than 75 per cent. of all items dispensed in the NHS are free of charge as well as continuing to provide pre-payment certificates for persons who are not exempt but who need frequent medication.

Hospital Pharmacists

49. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in recruiting more hospital pharmacists.

Mr. Mellor: Recruitment of hospital pharmacists is a matter for individual health authorities.

NHS (Privatisation)

51. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans for privatising the National Health Service.

53. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to privatise the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No, and I never have had any such plans.

Family Care

52. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much on average is being spent in the current year on each family from the current health budget; and how much is planned for each of the three subsequent years.

Mr. Freeman: Average gross NHS spending (current and capital) per head in England will be £442 this year (1989-90) and is planned to be £461 in 1990-91 and £479 in 1991-92. If the average family is considered to consist of four persons the average spending per family will be £1,767 this year and £1,845 and £1,917 in each of the following two years respectively. Planned expenditure figures for future years are subject to further consideration in future public expenditure surveys. The level of planned spending on the NHS for 1992-93 has not yet been decided.

Nursing Homes

54. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms exist to safeguard the interests of elderly residents of residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Mellor: The Registered Homes Act 1984 and associated regulations place the responsibility on local authorities and district health authorities as registering authorities to register private and voluntary residential care homes and nursing homes respectively and inspect them at least twice a year; the inspections may be unannounced and "out of hours". In addition, general guidance on the running of these homes is available in "Home Life" a code of practice for residential care, and the National Association of Health Authorities' "Handbook on Registration and Inspection of Nursing Homes", and in departmental guidance. Local authorities are also responsible for ensuring adequate standards in their own homes. The Department's social services inspectorate monitors and advises local authorities on the discharge of their duties.

Hospitals (Opting Out)

55. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of district health authorities in the north-west expressing an interest in hospitals opting-out.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is too early to do so. Mr. Duncan Nichol, the chief executive of the National Health Service, has asked for outline expressions of interest relating to proposals for self-governing hospitals within the NHS to come to my Department through RHAs, by 31 May.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now withdraw his proposals for the opting-out of hospitals from the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) earlier today.

Smoking

58. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy his Department has adopted in regard to smoking in departmental offices.

Mr. Mellor: The Department's policy has been under review and management and representatives of staff have discussed the introduction of a reviewed policy in line with the Health Education guidelines "Smoking Policies at Work" (ISBN 090365251X). On the basis of these discussions we will be moving towards a no smoking working environment by agreement in the Department's offices.

Health Districts (Treatment Costs)

60. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the variations in cost of treatment between different health districts.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) by my right hon. and learned Friend on 21 March 1989, at columns 562-63.

Drug Costs

61. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to take account in the analysis made of family doctors' drug costs of the savings in hospital treatment costs.

Mr. Mellor: Any analysis made of drug costs incurred by a general medical practice takes account of the reason for the prescribing pattern of that practice. This might include arrangements to treat patients with drug therapy in the community in preference to hospital treatment.

Doctors

63. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors there are, and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: In 1979 there were 60,764 doctors in the hospital and community health and family practitioner services in England. By 1987 the number was 68,777.

NHS (Contracting-out)

67. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he can give an estimate of the savings made in the last available year from the contracting out of services within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 21 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King), at column 564.

Clinical Efficiency

69. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received copies of the COHSE document on clinical efficiency.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Clinical Audit

70. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has received from trade unions on the development of clinical audit.

Mr. Mellor: Comments on the development of clinical audit have been received from the British Medical Association, the general medical services committee, the Royal College of Nursing and the Confederation of Health Service Employees.

Hearing Aid Services

71. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the case for improving hearing aid services.

Mr. Mellor: We are continuing to receive a wide range of views on the provision of hearing aid services following the launch of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's "Fair Hearing" campaign. The Department is giving careful consideration to all suggestions for change in examining the available options.

Listeria

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate additional scientific research into the epidemiology of listeriosis and the behaviour of its causative organism and as to whether the current statutory HTST milk pasteurisation temperature is fully effective in the destruction of listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will consider carefully any proposals to study the epidemiological risk factors (with particular reference to food) for the development of listeriosis. The behaviour of the causative organism has already been studied by the public health laboratory service and Camden Food Research Association, which were Government funded for this work. There is general international consensus that the HTST milk pasteurisation temperature and time requirements of 71·7°C for 15 seconds in the existing regulations is fully effective in the destruction of listeria monocytogenes.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a microbiological standard for listeria in foods.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have established a committee chaired by Sir Mark Richmond to advise them on the microbiological safety of food. The work of the committee will include consideration of listeria. The Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I will consider its recommendations on this and all related subjects as and when they are available.

Cook-chill Food

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce statutory control of cook-chill methods of food production, storage and display for sale.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The present food hygiene regulations cover all food business including those handling cook-chill foods. These are currently under review and we expect to be consulting on draft amending regulations in the near future.

Legionnaire's Disease (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the outbreak of legionnaire's disease at the Queen's medical centre, Nottingham.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is aware of the outbreak and is satisfied that effective measures are being taken urgently to trace the source of infection.

Offerton House, Stockport

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report of the town planning consultant who is examining the alternative uses of Offerton house, Stockport.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the Stockport health authority which commissioned the report, has no plans at present to send it to me.

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many former patients of Offerton house, Stockport, are taking part in the care in the community scheme; and how many have since returned to Offerton house.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that 30 patients have been discharged from Offerton house and none has returned.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the main reasons for food poisoning outbreaks according to his departmental research; and how many of these relate to temperature control.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold figures centrally on the reasons for reported outbreaks of food poisoning. Studies on a number of food poisoning outbreaks reported between 1970 and 1982 showed that inadequate temperature control was the main factor contributing to the growth of food poisoning organisms in food, but the problem can arise at any stage from production to consumption.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of food poisoning outbreaks were attributed to (a) catering type establishments, (b) retail, (c) home and (d) others in the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: the table shows the number of outbreaks of bacterial food poisoning and salmonella infection reported from 1979 to 1986 (the last year for which figures are currently available).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) salmonella, (b) campylobactor and (c) listeria outbreaks were reported in each year since 1979; and what estimate he has of the level of unreported outbreaks.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is available until 1987 and is as follows.

Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital (Radiation)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the delay in reaching agreement on a cash settlement for patients damaged by excessive radiation in 1988 at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement in the Adjournment debate on 6 April 1989, at columns 468-70.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Freeman: None that I am aware of.

Ambulance Personnel (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of ambulance personnel employed at the Sunderland ambulance station, (b) the number of ambulance personnel who have died from coronary attacks and related conditions while so employed and (c) the number of ambulance personnel who have retired from service due to heart conditions and related illnesses, showing each category year by year since 1985.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Northern regional health authority.

Stomach Cancer

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, of 9 March, Official Report, columns 585-86, whether his Department will conduct statistical tests on the rates of stomach cancer per 100,000 population for the figures he gave; and what assessment has been made of the causes of the differences between the rates for Liverpool and Warrington district health authorities and the national mean.

Mr. Freeman: I believe the hon. Member is referring to figures given in my answer to him of 15 March, at columns 233-34. There is a statistically significant difference between the rates for Liverpool, but not for Warrington, and the national average. It is a matter for health authorities in the first instance to monitor and investigate information on the incidence of disease as part of their responsibility for the planning and delivery of services.

Lung Disease (Miners)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of working miners were diagnosed as suffering from lung disease in each of the years (a) 1959, (b) 1961, (c) 1966, (d) 1971, (e) 1976, (f) 1981, (g) 1986 and (h) 1988; and what was the average incidence in the country as a whole.

Mr. Freeman: Information about numbers of working miners with lung disease or incidence of lung disease in the population as a whole is not collected centrally. The annual report of the Health and Safety Commission in its tables of cases of occupational diseases awarded benefit includes figures on occupational lung diseases. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, in the Leeds western health authority (a) what was the average increase in midwives' pay following the recent regrading, (b) how many midwives received increases of £2,000 or more and (c) how many midwives are employed on the F grade, E grade and D grade.

Mr. Mellor: We hold no information centrally on average pay increases for groups of staff within an individual district health authority, or on the numbers of staff within a district who received increases of a given amount.

The only information we hold here on the results of clinical regrading at district level relates to the assimilation at 1 April 1988 from old grades to new. This information has already been placed in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to introduce an appeal procedure for student midwives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Midwifery students already have a right of appeal under a long-standing agreement between the management and trades union sides of the General Whitley council on procedures for settling differences over NHS employees' conditions of service.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of home delivery training is given to trainee midwives in the Trent regional health authority; and what is the percentage nationally.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this infomation centrally. I suggest the hon. Member writes to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for the information he seeks.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Grand National

Mr Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations, and from whom, he has received about the deaths of horses at the current year's Grand National meeting at Aintree racecourse.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received one from an hon. Friend and 14 from members of the public.

Police Rent Allowance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report in tablular form details for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available of the total pay bill, compensatory grant received and income tax paid by each police authority in England and Wales in respect of police officers' rent allowance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Expenditure incurred by police authorities in England and Wales on salaries for police officers in 1987-88 is shown in the table. The figures for allowances include compensatory grant payments but it is not possible to identify such payments separately.

Prisoners (Rule 43)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are serving sentences under the protection of rule 43; and what is the percentage in relation to the numbers of prisoners, by prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics of prisoners on rule 43 have hitherto been collected centrally only in relation to adult males and the latest figures available are as at 31 December 1988. The information available is set out in the table. The percentages relate to the total sentenced adult male population at each establishment.

Police (Escort Duties)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the number of police who currently undertake escort duties of inmates from prison to courts; and what steps he is taking to encourage reallocation of this task.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In a report produced in July 1988, the police requirements support unit of the Home Office estimated, on the basis of a survey in four police areas, that the handling and escorting of prisoners to magistrates' courts cost the police in England and Wales more than £31 million per year. On the basis of the same report it has been estimated that approximately 1,000 officers per day are involved in this work.

As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 1 March at columns 277-78 further work is in hand towards contracting out the escorting, custody and control of prisoners with the aim of relieving both the police and prison service of this task.

Crowd Control

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library any manual, advice or other paper produced by his Department or the Police Staff College at Bramshill or any other official body relating to the control of crowds outside sports stadia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Chapter 14 of the "Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds", HMSO, 1986, offers guidance on crowd control. Paragraph 205 emphasises that effective arrangements to counter crowd disorder outside the ground must also be made. A copy of the guide is in the Library.

The Association of Chief Police Officers issues to its members general guidance on the policing of football matches, part of which relates to policing outside stadia. Disclosure of such guidance is a matter for the association.

Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give details of any emergency duty system for firefighters that he has considered for use in the event of hostilities or a war emergency;

(2) what advice he has issued to chief fire officers concerning wartime or emergency duty systems for firefighters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Guidance on wartime duty systems is contained in fire service circular 6/1984, paragraph 17. Detailed arrangements would be for the individual fire authorities to decide in the light of circumstances at the time. No such guidance has been given in relation to peacetime emergencies.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for determining the eligibility for civil defence grant aid of local authority emergency centre proposals.

Mr. John Patten: Relevant statutory provisions are contained in the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1634) and the Civil Defence (Grant) Regulations 1953 (SI 1953/1777) as amended. Proposals for such emergency centres should be in accordance with the guidance contained in the "Emergency Planning Guidance to Local Authorities", a copy of which is in the Library. In particular, information on the minimum standards for emergency centres is set out in annex D of section 4 of the EPGLA and on eligibility for grant aid in section 19.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those county and fire and civil defence authorities that had had message switch equipment installed in their emergency centres by 31 December 1988; and if he will list those county and fire and civil defence authorities that were expected to receive such equipment during the current year.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

County and Fire and Civil Defence Authorities (FCDAs) in England and Wales which had received message switch equipment by 31 December 1988:

Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Devon, Dorset, Durham, Essex, Gloucestershire, Gwent, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Humberside, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Northamptonshire, North Yorkshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Somerset, Staffordshire, Suffolk, West Yorkshire FCDA, Wiltshire.

Some revisions and additions to the above list can be expected in the light of site availability, following discussion with the authorities concerned.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those district authorities that had had message switch equipment installed in their emergency centres by 31 December 1988: and if he will list those district authorities that were expected to receive such equipment during the current year.

Mr. John Patten: The emergency planning guidance handbook on communications and the guide to message writing are due to be published later this year.

Consideration is being given to the need for a circular to update existing references to emergency communications provision and associated arrangements for grant aid. Any such circular is unlikely to be issued before next year.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the written reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 7 December 1988, Official Report, columns 204-5, (1) how many of the 35 emergency planning officers and 10 administrative and support staff employed by district authorities are wholly funded by his Department's civil defence grant;

(2) if he will list those district authorities which employ the 35 emergency planning officers and 10 administrative and support staff which are wholly or partly funded by Home Office civil defence grant.

Mr. John Patten: The aggregate figures quoted in the earlier reply derive from the employment of 22 full-time emergency planning officers, four full-time administrative and support staff and a number of part time staff in each category. The full-time posts are wholly funded by civil defence grant.

Communications

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to hold further exercises of communications similar to the COMTEST 89 exercise held on 12 January; if he has had any representations about the lack of translation capability for non-European languages highlighted by the COMTEST exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: COMTEST'89 was arranged by the Association of Chief Police Officers and funded by the Home Office. I understand a report on the exercise is now being drawn up and while we shall consider it carefully, it will be for ACPO to consider the operational implications and to take any decisions on the need for further exercises. No representations have been received about language problems.

Civil Defence College, Easingwold

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of expenditure on building maintenance at the civil defence college, Easingwold for each year from 1979 to the present time.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

Year[1]	£
1979-80	34,049
1980-81	47,858
1981-82	83,032
1982-83	32,037
1983-84	34,094

1987-88	200,190
1988-89	165,284

[1] (1 April—31 March).

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of capital expenditure on building improvements and extensions at the civil defence college, Easingwold for each year from 1979 to the present time.

Mr. John Patten: Details of capital expenditure in the years 1979-1984 are not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The information for subsequent years is as follows:

Year[1]	Minor works £	Major works £
1984-85	27,082	—
1985-86	12,765	—
1986-87	29,538	—
1987-88	60,854	—
1988-89	47,714	—

[1] (1 April—31 March).

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give current valuations for (a) the buildings, (b) the furniture, fixtures and fittings and (c) the land at the civil defence college, Easingwold.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms Expert Consultative Committee

Mr. Martin Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will appoint a chairman to the firearms expert consultative committee set up under the provisions of the Firearms (Amendment) Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 13 April at column 718.

Police (Ports)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each port in England and Wales at which police including special branch officers, are stationed either on a full-time or part-time basis the following information: (a) the name of the relevant police force, (b) the number of full-time equivalent police officers stationed there or the number of police man hours, (c) the total direct costs associated with policing each port, (d) the total indirect costs associated with policing each port and (e) the amount of money provided to each police force in respect of policing each port.

Mr. Hurd: Special branch offices are stationed on a full-time basis at those seaports and airports in England and Wales which are designated under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. In addition, uniformed police are stationed on a full-time basis at those airports in England and Wales which are designated under the Aviation Security Act 1982. The table shows which police force is responsible for the policing of each of the ports designated under these statutes. Police are also present on an ad hoc basis at a number of other ports in England and Wales.

The cost falls to the appropriate police authority and comes within the normal police funding arrangements. Under these arrangements the Home Office meets 51 per cent. of whatever a police authority spends on policing and an additional contribution is made from central Government funds by way of block grant. It would not be right in the interests of national security to publish information about numbers of officers, police man hours, or the costs associated with the policing of individual ports.

Information is not held centrally for sea ports whose owners appoint their own constables under local and private legislation and where costs are met by the harbour authorities.

Courts

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has as to the annual number of court hours which are lost as a result of the non-delivery or late delivery of prisoners to court; and if he will make a statement as to the estimated cost.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not routinely collected. Where defendants do not appear it will often be possible to rearrange business so that court time is not lost. There is insufficient information on which to base an estimate of cost.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent examination he has made of the reasons for delays in courts trying cases down for hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are carrying out a survey of the reasons for adjournments in cases before magistrates courts. A range of courts will take part in the survey in the last week in April.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has to the annual number of (a) magistrates court, (b) Crown court and central criminal court cases which are delayed or postponed as a result of the non-delivery of the defendant to the court by the police or prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not routinely collected. We expect to obtain information relating to cases postponed in a sample of magistrates courts from our forthcoming survey of reasons for adjournments.

Police (Prisoners)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give for each police force area the average number of police officers involved each day in the transport of prisoners to and from court; and what percentage of the average daily manpower of each force this represents;

(2) if he will give for each police force the daily and yearly cost of providing transport for prisoners to and from court.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to a question from the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) for the information which is available.

Firearms (Police)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many operations firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales in 1988; in how many of those operations shots were fired by police officers; how many police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Hurd: Information relating to the police use of firearms in operations against criminals or others known or believed to be armed in the years in question is given in the table.

1983	3,180	3	13,044
1984	2,667	6	11,873
1985	2,488	7	10,244
1986	2,453	1	8,395
1987	2,185	7	7,349
1988	2,227	2	7,194

These figures show that over five years the police have been issuing and using firearms less often. The figures show the continuing determination of the Government and of chief officers of police that the police use of firearms should remain a measure of the last resort, and that traditional methods of policing should continue.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 8 March to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds, Official Report, column 521, on what basis he determined in 1986 that the Property Services Agency site at Falmouth avenue, Newmarket, was too small to be redeveloped to accommodate civil servants located in Cambridge; and what was, and is, the average number of square feet he requires per civil servant doing the type of work in which the Property Services Agency is engaged in its Cambridge and Newmarket offices.

Mr. Chope: On the basis that the site of 1·21 acres could not be developed to provide the office space and parking facilities necessary for an establishment of some 400 staff.

Rates

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will make a statement about the level of rate increases in Greater London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average rise in domestic rate poundages in 1989-90 for the London boroughs and the City is 9·9 per cent., slightly above the national average.

The average masks a wide range of changes. In the six rate-capped authorities in London the average domestic rate poundage has decreased by 4·7 per cent. In Conservative boroughs the average rise is 7·6 per cent., compared wth 21·6 per cent. in those Labour boroughs which are not rate capped.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the total rate in the pound payable by a resident in the London boroughs of (a) Lambeth, (b) Camden, (c) Islington, (d) Southwark, (e) Brent and (f) Haringey, including Greater London council, Inner London education authority and other precepts where appropriate, and the district of Taunton Deane, Somerset, in the years 1980-81, 1984-85, 1986-87 and 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total rate in the pound, payable by a resident in the authorities listed for the years specified, is as follows:

Domestic Rate Poundage (P)

	1980-81	1984-85	1986-87	1989-90
Lambeth	145·4	233·1	217·2	202·6
Camden	118·4	202·7	209·4	210·7
Islington	117·9	233·5	184·3	224·4
Southwark	118·0	260·5	212·2	193·5
Brent	109·5	223·5	223·5	344·5
Haringey	131·5	259·3	267·8	363·4
Taunton Deane	104·4	140·7	186·8	247·7

Rateable Values

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of business premises taken from the recent Inland Revenue sample survey will have a rateable value between £1,000 and £7,500 in London and between £1,000 and £5,000 elsewhere in England; and what percentage of business premises will have a new rateable value between £7,500 and £22,500 in London and between £5,000 and £15,000 elsewhere in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is estimated that nearly half the properties covered by the Inland Revenue survey will have a new rateable value from 1 April 1990 of between £1,000 and £7,500 in London and between £1,000 and £5,000 elsewhere in England. Slightly more than a quarter of properties will have a new rateable value of between £7,500 and £22,500 in London, and slightly less than a quarter between £5,000 and £15,000 elsewhere in England.

This information is based on a sample survey of the effects of the revaluation of non-domestic properties and the introduction of a uniform business rate. The new valuations supplied for the sample of properties were best estimates, not actual revaluations. The results must therefore be treated with caution.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many executive officers, higher executive officers, senior executive officers and grade 7 (administration) staff were in post in the Crown Suppliers on 1 April.

Mr. Ridley: The number of executive staff in post in the Crown Suppliers on 1 April 1989 was as follows:

	Number
Executive Officers	111
Higher Executive Officers	52
Senior Executive Officers	23
Grade 7 (administrative)	14

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average length of tour in the Crown Suppliers of executive grades.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has no recognised average length of tour in the Crown Suppliers for any grade of staff.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many executive staff, namely, executive officers, HEOs, SEOs and grade 7 (administration) have since 1 April 1988 (a) transferred from other parts of the Civil Service into those areas of the Crown Suppliers intended for sale and (b) been posted in following direct recruitment into the Civil Service.

Mr. Ridley: Since 1 April 1988, three executive staff have transferred from other parts of the Civil Service into those areas of the Crown Suppliers intended for sale; and two administrative officers already in the Crown Suppliers have gained executive appointments in those areas through an open competition for recruitment into the Civil Service.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the criteria he will apply in deciding to whom to sell the Crown Suppliers should appropriate legislation be obtained.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 April 1989]: No decisions have yet been taken upon the detailed criteria which will apply.

Defective Housing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional housing investment programme allocation he has made in respect of (a) the Galleys Bank estate in Kidsgrove and (b) the Park Lane estate in Biddulph, in respect of problems concerning defective housing; what is the average allocation per affected dwelling in each estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Additional housing investment programme allocations of £389,000 and £690,000 were notified to Newcastle-under-Lyme and Staffordshire, Moorlands councils respectively to help them meet their housing defects obligations. These allocations are not made for specific estates or properties; it is for authorities to decide how to use them, together with their initial allocations and any other resources they have available.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals to amend the housing defects provisions following consultations with interested bodies.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. In the light of helpful comments from local authority associations, home owners groups and other interested bodies, we have decided to introduce certain amendments in the current Local Government and Housing Bill. This should help achieve a sound and practical streamlining of the housing defects scheme for the benefit of owners and local authorities alike. On the basis of consultations in Scotland, the Scottish Office proposes to introduce similar amendments to the parallel Scottish housing defects legislation.

The main proposal is for the taking down and reconstruction of an individual property, in an equivalent position, to be treated as reinstatement under the scheme so that grant-aid can be made available. Although somewhat less radical than our consultation suggestion, it would be more in line with Housing Defects Act reinstatement and, in certain circumstances, could offer a sensible and cost-effective alternative to reinstatement, provided that it is in accordance with the Act's other conditions. We also intend to bring eligible "shared owners" within the scheme by requiring local authorities to submit schemes for the Secretary of State's approval; and to allow the Secretary of State to extend the present two-month period for deciding local designations, where he needs more information.

We also propose a minor clarifying amendment to make it explicit that local authorities should decide owners' applications as soon as reasonably practicable.

We have decided at this time against the introduction of the proposed package of lifting Government-set limits on local authority reinstatement grants, with a revised degree of Exchequer contribution: consultees' responses generally favoured retaining existing controls, for the time being, to help ensure reinstatement is carried out cost effectively under the scheme.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many units of accommodation his Department estimates were brought into letting for homeless households (a) in Greater London, (b) in the south-east outside London and (c) in England as a whole, through local authority schemes to give existing council tenants cash incentives to buy a property on the open market (i) in 1986-87, (ii) in 1987-88 and (iii) in 1988-89; and at what average cost.

Mr. Trippier: Regional and national estimates are not available. An exploratory research study of the majority of those Brent and Bromley tenants who received cash payments for home purchase in 1986 was published in May 1988 and a copy was placed in the Library. The department expects that the further studies of schemes in Taunton Deane, Southend and Croydon will be received shortly from the survey organisation.

Grants paid under section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 will be monitored for 1989-90 and subsequent years.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each scheme selected for an additional allocation of housing investment programme funds, under the homeless initiative promoted by his Department's Estate Action team (a) during 1987-88 and (b) during 1988-89; how many units of accommodation each scheme brought into use for homeless households; and whether each scheme provided permanent or temporary accommodation for homeless households; and what was the date of completion of each scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Additional allocations under the Estate Action homelessness initiative have been made for the following schemes in 1987-88 and 1988-89. According to information supplied by local authorities all schemes were completed within the financial year in question.

Local Authority	Scheme	Number of units brought back into use	Permanent/ temporary accommodation	Allocation 1987/88 £	Allocation 1988/89 £

Archaeological Diggings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds are being made available to English Heritage in respect of the archaeological diggings in Lower Thames street; what further action his Department is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Newham North-West (Mr. Banks) on 18 April, at columns 77-78. English Heritage has not asked for additional funds for this purpose.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the effects of the introduction of the community charge on the tenants of almshouses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We considered the position of people in various types of accommodation when deciding on the definition of hostels, the residents of which will be exempt from the community charge. Our conclusion was that, in general, only establishments offering a high level of care should qualify. The tenants of almshouses will be able to apply for rebates of up to 80 per cent, if their incomes are low. Those in receipt of income support will have their income support increased to help them meet their 20 per cent. community charge payment.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from hon. Members on the levying of a community charge on second homes.

Mr. Gummer: We have received a good many representations on this and other aspects of the community charge.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to publish guidelines for private landlords on the need to deduct rates from combined rent and rates charges with the introduction of the community charge in April 1990;

(2) what protection will be offered to tenants in the private rented sector, who presently pay combined rent and rates charges, with the introduction of the community charge in April 1990.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 21 April.

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a transitional period for households with substantial increases in payments following the introduction of the poll tax in April 1990.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 April 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

The Government have proposed a safety net which will provide transitional protection for areas in which there would otherwise be substantial increases in average bills per household. The community charge rebate system will give further protection to chargepayers with low incomes.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each local authority in England (a) the illustrative community charge for 1989-90 (i) within and (ii) without safety net, (b) the comparable figures for 1988-89, (c) the percentage changes between the two years, (d) the average rate bill per household for 1989-90 and (e) the average number of adults per household.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which month he expects to announce illustrative 1989-89 community charges for Nottingham based upon the forthcoming year's rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Gummer: As in previous years, I intend publishing illustrative community charges for all local authority areas in England when detailed budget returns have been received. The date of publication will depend on prompt submission of those budget returns. So far 343 out of the 426 returns have been submitted.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the regulations which give poll tax registration officers access to local education authority lists containing the names and addresses of school pupils' parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. The regulations governing the administration of the community charge in England and Wales are the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 (S.I. 1989/438). Regulation 6 requires certain public bodies on request to provide the community charges registration officer (CCRO) with names, addresses and periods of residence where such information is within the possession or control of those bodies. The local education authority is among the bodies concerned, but the governors or proprietors of schools (who maintain registers containing the names and addresses of parents) are not. Whether such names and addresses can be given to the CCRO will therefore depend upon whether they have been passed into the possession or control of the authority. The authority may not inspect or take an extract from a school register other than for educational purposes.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government have identified a safe long-term method of disposing permanently of nuclear waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government believe that safe disposal routes for radioactive wastes can be developed in the United Kingdom. The Government have accepted Nirex's recommendation that a repository for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste should be constructed in the form of a mine under the land and that further investigations should be undertaken to determine the suitability of Sellafield or Dounreay for construction of a repository. Heat-generating radioactive wastes will be stored for at least 50 years to allow them to cool before a final decision on disposal is taken.

Caravan Parks

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his new model standards for caravan parks.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend published the revised model standards on 19 April. Separate standards have been specified for permanent residential mobile home sites and for holiday caravan sites. As a result of research sponsored by my Department, the spacing standard for holiday caravans with aluminium or other similar fire-resistant exteriors has been reduced from 6 to 5m. This takes account of the changes which have occurred in the caravan industry over the past decade and, together with other changes in the new standards, should lead to more attractive holiday caravan site layouts.

The standards have been circulated to all local authorities in England and Wales and to other interested bodies and copies have been placed in the House Libraries. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the status of the London Docklands development corporation will be upon the expiry of its enterprise zone status.

Mr. Trippier: When the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone expires the corporation will cease to be the enterprise zone authority for the purposes of part XVIII of and schedule 32 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, and will then gain the full range of planning powers in that area of docklands. Its status will otherwise be unchanged.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all planning permissions given by the London Docklands development corporation along the river Thames in the borough of Southwark which secure a public riverside walkway.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 April 1989]: A list of 17 permissions given by the LDDC since 1981 has been placed in the Library. The corporation is committed to securing extensive riverside and dockside access throughout its area. Twelve miles of waterside are so far accessible, and a further 15 miles are proposed.

Lindane (Lost Container)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current whereabouts of the container of lindane lost on 13 March.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

The container, lost while under tow by a French ship to Cherbourg, was thought to be about 25 km north-west of the Cap de la Hague. The French authorities, who are responsible for co-ordinating counter-pollution operations in that area of the Channel, have carried out an intensive but unsuccessful search for it using both surface vessels and a submersible. That special search has now been called off on the basis of a joint Anglo/French scientific assessment of the pollution threat which concluded that the physical nature of the lindane, the packaging, depth of water in which the container was lost, water currents and other factors, are such that the likelihood of contamination is much less than at first feared.

In the process of normal training and exercises, the French Navy will continue to look for the missing container. The French authorities also continue to carry out an intensive programme of sampling and analysis of seawater and fish.

Bathing Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost at current prices to each water authority in England to bring the bathing beaches that fail to meet the standards laid down in the European Community bathing water directive (76/160/EEC) into conformity.

Mr. Howard: Water authorities are spending about £100 million a year on schemes to improve the quality of bathing waters and this rate of spending is likely to increase. However, detailed proposals for schemes to improve bathing waters are still being formulated and it is too soon to estimate the total spending required by each authority to meet EC bathing water quality standards.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was his Department's response to the Countryside Commission's consultation papers, "Paths, Routes and Trails" and "Changing the Rights of Way Network".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not commented on either paper.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department measures the reduction in the time taken to decide opposed rights of way orders in the absence of information on the receipt of, and replies to, letters by his Department's offices in Bristol; and if he will publish such information as is available to indicate how substantial the reduction is.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The time between the submission of an order to the Department's Bristol office and the issue of a decision is recorded for every case. The median from submission to decision in 1987-88 was 53 weeks; in 1988-89 this time was reduced to 40 weeks.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number and proportion of empty dwellings at the latest available date in (a) the private rented sector, (b) the housing association sector, (c) the central Government sector and (d) the local authority sector.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 April 1989]: Estimates derived from the housing investment programme returns of English local authorities for April 1988 are as follows:

	Vacant dwellings (number in '000s)	Vacant dwellings as a percentage of stock
Local authority[1]	101·2	2·4
Housing Association	12·7	2·5
Other public sector[2]	16·1	6·5
Private[3]	579·5	4·1

[1] Includes dwellings which are closed or have been acquired for demolition but excludes dwellings on overspill estates.

[2] Includes housing owned by new towns, county councils, Government Departments, nationalised industries, other public bodies and council dwellings on overspill estates. Many of these are vacant because of operational requirements, notably those owned by the Ministry of Defence and others have been acquired for demolition for example, by the Department of Transport. The Government are encouraging the sale of housing which is surplus to requirements and many of those that are vacant are in the process of disposal.

[3] Includes owner-occupied as well as private rented dwellings.

Local Authority Employees (Pensions)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will introduce regulations to allow part-time local government employees to buy additional service for pension purposes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 April 1989]: These proposed regulations were held up for a long time by a dispute between the local government employers and unions. Since this was settled we have needed to consult other Departments on the proposal that the regulations should apply not only to present employees but to those who have retired since April 1986. This has just been agreed. We will now give the preparation of the regulations as much priority as possible. In view of this agreement those employees who retire before the regulations are made will not be placed at a disadvantage.

River Mersey (Pollution)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what chemicals the Norsochem works is allowed to discharge into the Mersey; and in what quantities.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 April 1989]: I understand that the company currently has deemed consent to discharge a range of organic chemicals into the Mersey. Details of the type and quantity of chemicals which the company is allowed to discharge are on the public register maintained by the North West water authority and available for inspection.

I understand that the North West water authority is shortly to replace the deemed consent with a positively determined consent. Details of this consent including the conditions to which it is subject, will also be entered on the public register.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions relating to pollution of the Mersey his Department has brought against companies for the time for which figures are available; and what were the verdicts and fines in each case.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 April 1989]: Responsibility for enforcement of water pollution controls over industry rests with the regional water authorities and comprehensive information about prosecutions is not held centrally.

However, I understand that in 1987, the North West water authority brought a total of 23 prosecutions for offences committed under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, in the Mersey catchment as a whole. All resulted in convictions, with an average fine imposed of £680. Of the prosecutions brought in 1988, 17 have so far been tried, all resulting in convictions with average fines of £670.

Local Authority Services

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report (a) those services which local authorities must presently provide free of charge; (b) those services for which local authorities are permitted to charge in accordance with regulations or primary legislation, where the charges are set in those regulations of primary legislation, where the charges are set in those regulations or primary legislation or otherwise by the Government and (3) those services for which local authorities are permitted to charge in accordance with regulations or primary legislation, where the charges are for local discretion.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 19 April 1989]: This information is not available in precisely the form requested by the hon. Member. I am placing in the Library such information as is available about local authorities' charging powers.

Peak Park (Planning Applications)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for house building have been made to the Peak park planning board; how many have been successful; and how many have been for starter homes and how many for family residences.

Mr. Trippier: Since April 1984, the Peak park joint planning board has dealt with 1,110 planning applications for house building, of which 11 were for starter homes. A total of 626 applications (56·4 per cent.) were approved including six for starter homes. No records are kept of the number of family residences involved in the applications.

Council Houses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement further to his reply of 7 February, Official Report, column 600, about council houses.

Mr. Trippier: No.

DEFENCE

Royal Armoured Corps

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on manning levels at all ranks in the Royal Armoured Corps.

Mr. Neubert: At 31 December 1988 soldier strength in the Royal Armoured Corps was 63 men, or 0·8 per cent., below its establishment of 8,039. Because the rank ranging system of filling posts is employed in the Royal Armoured Corps, it is not possible to split the establishment down into ranks, but the shortfall is at the bottom of the structure.

At 31 December 1988 officer strength in the Royal Armoured Corps was 1,268, 103 officers (8 per cent.) below establishment. Almost all the shortfall is at the rank of captain.

RSRE, Malvern

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to dispose of the RSRE north site, Malvern.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has no plans at present to dispose of the north site at RSRE Malvern. The possibility of establishing a science park using part of the site is under consideration.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken following receipt of the feasibility plan for use of the RSRE north site Malvern, sent by PA Consultants in December 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The consultants report examined the feasibility of establishing a science park using part of the north site at RSRE, Malvern. Consideration is being given to the way ahead, taking into account our recent announcement of intentions regarding the defence research agency, in which RSRE would be included.

Defence Estimates

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the 1989 "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Mr. Younger: I intend to publish this year's "Statement on the Defence Estimates" on Tuesday 2 May.

Firework Injuries

92. Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will now publish the firework injury statistics for 1988.

Mr. Forth: The firework injury statistics were published in answer to a written question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 20 April, at columns*256-58*.

Paper and Pulp Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the United Kingdom's imports of (a) paper and (b) pulp in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is given in the following table:

United Kingdom imports of paper and paperboard, waste paper and paperboard and pulp 1979-88

Machine Safety

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement setting out the manner in which the adoption of the machine safety directive will facilitate the flow of trade within the EEC.

Mr. Maude: The aim of the machinery safety directive, which covers a wide range of machines, is the removal of barriers to trade through the harmonisation of legislation in member states. It lays down the essential requirements and certification procedures that machines have to meet to ensure free circulation throughout the Community.

Once the directive has been adopted and implemented, manufacturers or their agents resident in the Community will be required to ensure their machines meet the relevant essential safety requirements before they can market their products in the European Community. Manufacturers can choose the method of meeting the essential requirements from a number of options, including the use of harmonised European standards. The adoption of this directive will help remove the special requirements that exist in some member states, which have prevented free trade in the past. As a result, an open, single market will be created, which will enable the United Kingdom industry to compete on an equal footing in the European Community.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on artificial lower limbs is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The report on the supply of artificial lower limbs in the United Kingdom is published today. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission found that certain conduct of the largest supplier of artifical lower limbs in the United Kingdom, InterMed Ltd., a subsidiary of BTR plc with a market share of 70 per cent., operated against the public interest. Chas A. Blatchford and Sons Ltd., with a 26 per cent. market share, was also a monopolist, but the Commission did not find any conduct of this company that operated against the public interest.

The commission found that InterMed, through its three subsidiaries—J. E. Hanger & Co. Ltd., Vessa Ltd., and Robert Kellie and Son Ltd.—had obtained prices for, and profits from, its supply of artificial lower limbs which were higher that could be expected in circumstances of normal competition. In addition, it had used its monopoly position to place unreasonable pressure on public sector purchasers, having regard to the nature of the sector, and had been unco-operative with them. Because of this InterMed had not given sufficient regard to the interests of patients.

The commission recommended that, subject to a report from the disablement services authority to the Director General of Fair Trading on the impact of the impending round of tendering for prosthetic services at certain disablement services centres on InterMed's business, InterMed should divest itself (within six months of 30 April 1989) either of Hanger or Vessa, and that neither company should be sold to Blatchfords. They also recommend that, both before and after such divestment, InterMed be required to supply the products in question to any public sector purchaser or contractor on the same terms, conditions and prices as they were made available to its own prosthetists and technicians; and the Director General of Fair Trading invite a further report from the DSA by 30 September 1990 on the progress made towards promoting a more competitive market.

I welcome this report and accept the MMC's findings and conclusions. However, in view of current changes in the state of competition in this market, I am asking the Director General of Fair Trading to advise me as soon as possible whether in order to remedy the adverse effects the MMC identified it is still necessary to require InterMed to divest part of its artificial lower limbs activities. Also I am inviting the Director General to seek undertakings from BTR, or its subsidiary InterMed, not to discriminate between, on the one hand, public sector purchasers and contractors and, on the other, its own prosthetists and technicians in the supply of artificial lower limbs.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the internal market Council held on 13 April.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, adopted directives on secondary fertilisers and on the design and construction of side guards to be fitted to heavy goods vehicles.

It also reached common positions on three proposals, as follows. The draft 11th company law directive requires companies from outside a member state that establish a place of business (or branch) in that member state to deliver certain documents, including accounting documents, to the relevant companies registry. The broadcasting directive will break down existing barriers to the free flow of television programmes across frontiers in the Community; and a directive on dangerous substances will harmonise restrictions on the marketing and use of seven dangerous substances and preparations.

The Council also discussed the proposal for an EC merger control regulation, and the draft directive on right of residence thoughout the Community for EC nationals not already deemed to have such a right under the free movement provisions of the Treaty of Rome.

Urea (Imports)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements exist to control the import of urea from non-European Community countries; and if he will list the tariffs imposed on each supplier nation.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no quota restrictions on imports of urea into the United Kingdom, although certain overseas countries gave volume undertakings on their exports to the Community as a result of two anti-dumping investigations completed in 1987 and 1989.

There are two EC import duty rates; 11 per cent. for urea which contains 45 per cent. or more by weight of nitrogen on the dry anhydrous product and 8 per cent. for all other types. However, imports of urea from most developing countries are allowed into the EC duty free under GSP arrangements and under various EC trade agreements. The only exceptions are Venezuela and Mexico, whose imports under the 11 per cent. duty rate are subject to the full rate of duty, and Romania, for which all types of urea are subject to the full duty rate. Definitive anti-dumping duties are applicable to imports of urea from Libya, Saudi Arabia, the United States of America (with the exception of one company) and Venezuela.

Girobank

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on any proposal to renegotiate the counters contract and the Department of Social Security contract to the advantage of Girobank in the light of Alliance and Leicester's conditional offer of purchase.

Mr. Forth: Any renegotiation of the terms of the contracts between Girobank and Post Office Counters and between Girobank and the Department of Social Security is a matter for the parties concerned.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will place in the Library the information on publicity campaigns referred to in the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 10 April, Official Report, column 399.

Mr. Forth: The information requested has now been placed in the Library of the House.

Aircraft Exports

Mr. George: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if British Aerospace sought authorisation from his Department for the flight to, and exhibition at, Baghdad, of an advanced Hawk trainer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 25 April 1989]: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual licensing matters. Licences are required for the export to Iraq of military equipment which is subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order (S.I. 1987 No. 2070), as amended.

Applications for such licences are examined in particular against the guidelines on the export of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq announced to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary of 29 October 1985, at column 454.

Mr. George: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he takes to ensure that military aeroplanes licensed for export for training purposes are not converted to combat use.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 25 April 1989]: Licences are required for the export to all destinations of military aeroplanes which are subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1987 (S.I. 1987 No. 2070) as amended.

Applications for such licences are considered on a case-by-case basis in accordance with stringent export control procedures.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners' Earnings Limit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are entitled to (a) the single retirement pension, and (b) the married couples' retirement pension; and of these how many are currently affected, in each category, by the pensioners' earnings limit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statistics relating to entitlement to retirement pension cannot be broken down according to marital status. Approximately 2,500 individuals currently have their basic pension reduced on account of earnings over £75 a week. In addition, approximately 200,000 individuals deferring receipt of their state pension because of earnings over £75 a week may now choose to draw their pension.

Oglesby Report

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to implement the recommendations in the Oglesby report that mobility allowance tribunals and social security appeal tribunals should be amalgamated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the present system, non-medical questions arising on mobility allowance claims are decided, on appeal, by social security appeal tribunals; medical questions are decided by medical boards and thereafter, if necessary, by medical appeal tribunals. We have no plans at present to revise this aspect of medical adjudication.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make available any instructions issued since 1965 to staff in his Department whose duties involve either visiting or assessing claims from people who are mentally handicapped concerning the manner in which such claims are to be assessed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no instructions on assessment of claims from mentally handicapped people, and their appointees, beyond those which apply to all claimants. A copy of the 'S' manual containing current assessment instructions is in the Library.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what special training is given to staff in his Department to make sure that they deal effectively and sympathetically with claims from people who are mentally handicapped and their families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department's staff involved in customer service receive advice and guidance on dealing sympathetically and efficiently with disabled people.

More detailed and specific training is given to social fund officers, and covers the need to recognise and appreciate the significance of disability, including mental handicap, and the problems and circumstances arising. This training is now available to all local office staff.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has of the past underpayment of substantial amounts of supplementary benefit to mentally handicapped people because of inadequate assessment of their cases by staff in his Department; and what steps he is taking to remedy this situation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no statistics available on the accuracy of the assessment in respect of claims for supplementary benefit from the mentally handicapped. The award of supplementary benefit, which was replaced in April 1988 by income support, is a matter for the independent statutory authorities.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the names of the chairman and wing members of the Hartlepool social security appeal tribunal and give information of their backgrounds and the reasons they were considered suitable to serve on the tribunal.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The appointment of members and the nomination of the chairman to the Hartlepool social security appeal tribunal is the responsibility of the president, His Honour Judge Byrt, QC, and the hon. Member may care to contact him direct.

Income Support

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what alterations he plans to make to income support provision for asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that all people, including asylum seekers, who are entitled to urgent case payments will in future receive the appropriate income support premiums, to which they are not entitled at present.

This follows a commitment I gave during the Committee stage of the Social Security Bill to consider the position of asylum seekers who claim income support.

Families, in particular, who are eligible for the payments will find themselves significantly better off as a result of these changes. All such families will gain £6·50 a week; lone parents will gain £10·40 a week, and families with a disabled child £13·00 a week. The representations in Committee referred to the level of benefit paid under the old rules to a lone parent with a disabled child. These changes will provide an extra £16·90 a week in those circumstances.

I intend to lay before the House regulations to bring these beneficial changes into effect from July.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for 1978, 1979 and 1988 for each social security office and each social security region, the number of (a) claimants and (b) dependants on (i) supplementary benefit or income support and (ii) family income support or family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained as soon as possible.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire to date what statistical information he has as to the different reasons given by social fund officers (a) for negative decisions to claimants on (i) budgeting loans and (ii) partial awards and (b) to claimants for nil award decisions for (i) community care grants and (ii) partial awards.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 17 April 1989]: The local offices in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire are Doncaster East, Doncaster West, and Wath on Dearne.

The table gives the number of times that a reason for decision is used by social fund officers for determining a nil award for community care grants and budgeting loans.

No information is collected on reasons for decision for partial awards.

An application can be refused for more than one reason. The total number of reasons for decision used will be equal to or greater than the number of applications refused. Information on the numbers of applications processed and awards is available in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

CSCE Information Forum

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria were used in choosing the members of the British delegation to the CSCE information forum starting in London on 18 April; what consideration was given to consulting trade union representatives from unions whose members are involved in the collection and dissemination of news, current affairs and cultural matters, in the process of selection and nomination for selection; and what consideration was given to consulting other representative bodies in the media and cultural field.

Mrs. Chalker: Invitations to join the British delegation to the London information forum were issued to a large number of people, with a view to constituting a balanced and representative team able to bring appropriate expertise to a wide agenda. The formation of the delegation was preceded by consultations attended by numerous organisations. The TUC did not respond to our invitation to participate or supply comments.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria were used in deciding the appointment of the leader of the British delegation to the CSCE information forum, starting in London on 18 April.

Mrs. Chalker: Having decided that the British delegation should if possible be led by a personality from outside Government, Ministers sought an eminent and independent individual with a sound knowledge of public affairs and wide experience of the written and broadcast media. Britain is in fact the only country whose delegation is led by a person from outside Government.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he took of Lord Rees-Mogg's record of service at The Times, the British Broadcasting Corporation and the Broadcasting Standards Council in deciding to make the appointment of the leader of the British delegation to the CSCE information forum.

Mrs. Chalker: Lord Rees-Mogg was invited to lead the United Kingdom delegation to the London information forum because of his wide experience of public affairs and of the written and broadcast media.

Hong Kong

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the role and duties of the governor of Hong Kong.

Mrs. Chalker: The governor is the personal representative of the Queen in Hong Kong. He is responsible to the Secretary of State. He directs the administration of Hong Kong and is the commander-in-chief of the British forces stationed in Hong Kong. As head of the Hong Kong Government he presides at meetings of the Executive Council. He is also president of the Legislative Council.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote United Kingdom interests in Hong Kong after 1997.

Mrs. Chalker: Our interests will be principally met by the effective implementation of the Joint Declaration and the maintenance of Hong Kong as an international financial and commercial centre. Against this background we are encouraging the private sector to build on our existing commercial successes in Hong Kong both as an important market in its own right and as an export centre for the Asia Pacific region. We will continue to foster our cultural links with the territory. We are actively preparing to establish a British consulate-general for the promotion of our interests in Hong Kong after 1997.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the objectives of Government policy on Hong Kong.

Mrs. Chalker: Our prime objective is the continued stability and prosperity of Hong Kong and its people. To this end we are committed to fulfil our responsibility for the administration of Hong Kong until 30 June 1997 and to ensure the full and faithful implementation of the Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong. We also aim to foster and strengthen Britain's commercial and other links with Hong Kong up to and beyond 1997.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Chlorofluorocarbons

91. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of financial assistance he is giving or planning to give to other nations to ensure that no extra financial burden is placed upon them in moving away from chlorofluorocarbon-based technology.

Mr. Chris Patten: Within our overseas aid programme we are ready to respond positively to requests for assistance from development countries. For example, the Government are willing to help countries find ways of avioding the use of CFCs and to examine the implications of CFC-free strategies. We have just offered India £40 million of new local costs aid for environmental projects. Most of this is expected to be spent on forestry, but it is also available to help that country adopt alternative practices to the use of CFCs.

ENERGY

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Parkinson: As at 1 April 1989 numbers in the support grades were 51, of whom one was a casual. There was one vacancy of more than one month's standing. Overtime averages 290 hours per month in London for 47 staff and 60 hours per month elsewhere for four staff.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the areas of British Coal in order of production levels and the number of major injuries sustained in each area as a proportion of the work force.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested, in a form that is available, is as follows:

Rate of Major Injuries per 100,000 manshifts

Area-Group[1]	Number
Notts	2·70
North Yorkshire	2·93
South Yorkshire	2·75
Central	2·33
North East	2·88
North West	2·36
South Wales	3·78
Scottish	3·70
Kent	3·90

[1] Listed in order of revenue output during 1988-89

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of licensed mines currently in operation; how many people are employed therein; and what proportion of these workers have suffered significant industrial injury in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As at December 1988 there were 166 licensed mines operating in Britain, employing just over 2,000 men. Information which shows whether these particular men have suffered significant injuries is not available. However, the major accident rates for licensed mines for the years for which information is available are as follows:

Accident rates in licensed mines (for 1,000 men)

	Number
1986-87	21·90
1987-88	21·60
1988-89	13·3

Non-fossil Fuel Technologies

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which non-fossil fuel technologies the Government regard as sufficiently established to provide substantial generation in the United Kingdom on a time scale of 15 years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear and hydro-electricity energy are both already making a substantial contribution to electricity generation in the United Kingdom and will continue to do so.

In addition, tidal and wind energy, landfill gas and the combustion of solid wastes have the potential to make a substantial contribution within 15 years.

Greenhouse Effect (Control)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his policy on the role to be played by nuclear power in this country and abroad in helping to reduce and control the greenhouse effect; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is able to estimate the probable reduction per year in the level of carbon dioxide emissions, expressed in million tonnes, by substituting one pressurised water reactor for an equivalent capacity coal-fired station;

(3) whether a United Kingdom pro-rata contribution to the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. of their 1988 levels, as called for in the Toronto conference statement to combat the greenhouse effect, could be met solely through Government-led energy conservation, the increased use of renewable energy sources and the novel coal burning technologies currently under development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nuclear power is already making a significant contribution to curbing emissions of carbon dioxide both here and abroad and I believe that it has an important contribution to make as part of any future international response to the threat of manmade climate change. I estimate that in broad terms substitution of a large PWR for equivalent coal-fired generation might reduce carbon dioxide emissions by around 6 million tonnes a year.

The inter-governmental panel on climate change, to which the United Kingdom has given its full support, is currently conducting a wide-ranging review of the climate change issue; it is therefore inappropriate to consider specific emission reduction targets at this time. It is likely, however, that any response would vary according to the economic and technical circumstances of individual countries and involve a wide range of measures including improved efficiency in both the supply and use of energy as well as moves toward less carbon-intensive fuels. My Department's policies for encouraging economic energy efficiency, the development of renewable energy sources, and diversity in supply are a firm basis for any future action.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the application offshore of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Peter Morrison: An Order in Council has today been laid before Parliament, the main effect of which is to bring gas storage and accommodation installations, and mobile installations in transit, within the scope of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The general provisions of the 1974 Act were applied offshore in 1977.

The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 (Application outside Great Britain) (Variation) Order 1989 brings the definitions of offshore installation and pipeline into line with those currently in force in other offshore safety legislation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council which commenced on 17 April in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made earlier today.

Food Contamination

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department has made in the reduction and elimination of food contamination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: We are making good progress in implementing the wide range of measures which we are taking with the aim of continuing to ensure that food is safe.

Nature Conservation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the progress made in establishing water management trials at Southlake Moor, King's Sedgemoor and West Sedgemoor to monitor the benefit of wetland wildlife; and whether the trials will provide information on water pump level variations.

Mr. Ryder: Two water management trials are proceeding on West Sedgemoor and South Lake Moor. Further possible trial sites, including King's Sedgemoor, are still under investigation. The trials will provide information on water pump level variations to help assess the benefit to wetland wildlife.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of ESA agreements reached with owners and occupiers within the area known as the Somerset Levels and Moors, the area of land involved and the total cost of payments made to the end of January 1989 in 1989 prices.

Mr. Ryder: The total number of agreements reached within the Somerset Levels and Moors ESA by the end of 1988 is 642 covering an area of 8,877 hectares. These agreements have resulted in payments which in total cost £1·458 million in 1989 prices, to the end of the 1988-89 financial year.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a new provision in the Water Bill which would enable internal drainage boards to adopt water management regimes for the purpose of enhancing nature conservation.

Mr. Ryder: Internal drainage boards are already required by section 48 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to further the interests of conservation consistent with their land drainage responsibilities. This duty is carried forward under clause 8 of the Water Bill. Specific advice on water level management is included in our guidelines to drainage authorities on their section 48 responsibilities which was issued last year.

Rosewarne Experimental Horticulture Establishment

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will defer the closure of Rosewarne experimental horticulture establishment until 31 October to enable current research programmes to be completed and to facilitate negotiations for its future.

Mr. Ryder: It is not proposed to close Rosewarne before 31 October. Final decisions on the closure will not be taken until my noble Friend the Baroness Trumpington has completed her consultations with interested bodies on the industry funding of near-market research.

Nuclear Waste

Mr John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on environmental damage in relation to discharge of nuclear waste products in the sea around the Cornish coastline.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The effects of liquid radioactive waste discharged by major nuclear sites to the marine environment around the United Kingdom coastline are monitored by my Department as part of its regular programme of aquatic environmental monitoring.

The results of this monitoring, which are published annually, demonstrate that radioactivity around the Cornish coastline and elsewhere does not occur at levels likely to result in damage to either the marine environment or the living resources which it supports.

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to license manufacturing, distribution, catering and retail premises in order to reduce food poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A proposal that all food businesses should be registered is being considered as part of the review of the Food Act 1984.

Dental and Eye Tests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what month he expects to make comparisons between the number of dental and eye tests before and after the introduction of charges.

Mr. Mellor: Demand for dental treatment is subject to short-term fluctuation irrespective of changes made to charges. The Department monitors the number of courses scheduled for payment each month. It is unlikely that an assessment of whether there has been an effect on demand following the introduction of the examination charge can be made until figures are available for the quarter July-September 1989. On sight tests, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 17 April, at column 47.

NHS Capital Expenditure

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of capital expenditure in the National Health Service, at constant prices, in each year since 1959.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows capital expenditure on the NHS in each year between 1959 and 1988 in 1988 prices. The figure for 1988 reflects the latest available estimate of receipts from land sales and so on, in 1988. The figures have been derived from the United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office.

Consultants

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to announce the names of the health districts which are to get extra consultants; what criteria are being used for the allocation of the 100 posts; which authorities have applied for extra consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We wrote to health authorities on 13 April inviting them to submit bids for the 100 extra consultant posts announced in "Working for Patients" by 31 July 1989. We expect to notify authorities of successful bids in October. I refer the right hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 7 March, at column 487, for the criteria which will be used in allocating the posts.

Opencast Sites

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there has been any increase in the incidence of asthma, stomach ulcers, arthritis or ear infection in areas which neighbour or are close to opencast sites.

Mr. Freeman: Information of this type is not available centrally.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the National Health Service provision for those addicted to the benzodiazepine drugs who are trying to end their dependency.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. Services for those dependent on benzodiazepines are provided by general practitioners, general psychiatric services, community drug teams, and specialist services for those experiencing problems with illicit or prescribed drugs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the annual number of prescriptions for the five most common benzodiazepine drugs.

Mr. Mellor: The number of prescriptions for the five benzodiazepines most commonly dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in 1987 was as follows:

Thousands

Drug	Number of prescriptions
Temazepam	7,752
Nitrazepam	5,227
Diazepam	5,078
Lorazepam	2,902

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has as to the frequency with which general practitioners prescribe benzodiazepine drugs for periods longer than that recommended by the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect centrally any information about the length of time for which GPs prescribe drugs for patients.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report the names of groups known to be working with benzodiazepine sufferers; if he will give the funds allocated to each by his Department; and if he will consider providing core funding for all such groups.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold centrally a list of groups working with those dependent on benzodiazepines. The Department is, however, funding the National Association for Mental Health (MIND) to produce a national directory of services for this group.

The provision and funding of direct client services for this group is the responsibility of the local statutory authorities. In order to pump-prime the development of local services for those experiencing problems with illicit or prescribed drugs, the Government established a central funding initiative, under which £17·5 million was allocated to 188 local projects. In addition, since 1986 the Government have allocated funds to regional health authorities specifically for the development of drug misuse services, including services for those dependent on benzodiazepines. This funding totals almost £15 million in 1989-90.

Core funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 is awarded primarily to national organisations. Under this scheme in 1988-89 the Department gave a grant of £10,000 to TRANX (UK) Ltd. The Department's grant to MIND also covers the production of public information material on benzodiazepines.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consult pharmaceutical companies producing benzodiazepines about ways in which they could help those who have become addicted to these drugs.

Mr. Freeman: Those who have become dependent on benzodiazepines can obtain help from their general practitioner, the general psychiatric services, community drug teams, specialist drug dependency services, and voluntary agencies.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail the action he has taken to encourage general practitioners not normally to prescribe the benzodiazepine drugs for periods longer than those recommended by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; and if he will take further action.

Mr. Mellor: General practitioners now have all the information and advice, including that from the Committee on Safety of Medicines, that they need to prescribe benzodiazepines. It is up to doctors to take heed of this advice and to exercise their clinical judgment when prescribing in each case.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will allocate funds for research into the damage to various organs of the body that can arise from the use of the benzodiazepine drugs.

Mr. Mellor: I have no plans to do so.

Medical Records

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to require general practitioners to record in their patients' medical records full details of all prescriptions.

Mr. Mellor: No. Under his terms of service a general practitioner is already required to keep adequate records of the illnesses and treatment of his patients.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to make extended ambulance training compulsory for all ambulance service personnel in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. At the discretion of employing authorities, extended training can be made available to qualified and leading ambulance personnel, but on a voluntary basis.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to obtain an accurate account of teacher shortages in secondary education.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department collects information from local education authorities each year on the number of vacant posts by secondary subject. The results of the secondary staffing survey, conducted last year, will be available shortly.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on restoration of the negotiating rights of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received approximately 120 letters on this issue since 1 January 1989 both directly and through hon. Members.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the recruitment of teachers of shortage subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department launched its action programme on teacher shortages in 1986. Recruitment to initial teacher training last year showed an increase in mathematics by 27 per cent., in science by 9 per cent. and in technology by 39 per cent. over the levels in 1986. The Government will develop their action programme as necessary to ensure a sufficient supply of qualified teachers in these subjects to meet the needs of schools.

Schoolchildren (Sport)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is proposing any steps to encourage Saturday participation in sport by schoolchildren.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no specific plans at present to encourage Saturday participation in sport by schoolchildren. We hope, however, that the inclusion of physical education, of which sport is a component, as a foundation subject in the national curriculum for all pupils aged five to 16 will encourage those who wish to do so both to participate in sport outside school hours and to continue with sport after they leave school.

Nursery Education

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in the work of the working party to investigate nursery education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The committee of inquiry on the quality of the educational experience offered to the under-fives will hold its first meeting on 25 May when I expect it to settle its programme of work.

English Grammar and Verse

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had regarding the inclusion of English grammar and the learning of verse by heart within the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responses to the consultations on the draft order for English for pupils in the first key stage of the national curriculum have included various comments on the place of grammar and verse learning. These are being considered.

Parent Registers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance he has issued to local education authorities and schools on the compilation of parent registers for opt-out ballot purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Pupils' Registration (Amendment) Regulations 1988 require every school to maintain an admissions register which includes the name and address of each person known to the governing body to be a parent of a registered pupil at the school. Sections 60 and 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988 provide for the use of this information where a ballot of parents on grant-maintained status is contemplated or under way. The Department's circular 10/88, and booklet "School Governors: How To Become A Grant-Maintained School", offer guidance on these provisions. Copies of the regulations, the relevant Administrative memorandum, the circular and booklet were sent to every LEA and school last year. The Department also wrote to all chief education officers on 13 February this year, in part about allegations that some LEAs were abusing this information. Copies of each of these documents were placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside, of 12 April, Official Report, column 526, whether he has any plans to issue guidance to local education authorities and schools on the information to be made available from parent registers to community charge registration officers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department will shortly be writing to the local authority associations on this subject.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions he has held on the rights of access to parent registers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has held no recent discussions on this topic.

Language Teaching

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on, and what consideration he has given to, the inclusion of Indic languages as modern foreign languages in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 23 March, at columns 683-84. Since then, my right hon. Friend has received a number of other representations from hon. Members—including one from the hon. Member—local education authorities, organisations, parents and teachers about the inclusion of Indic languages as modern foreign languages in the national curriculum. We are at present considering the responses received about the proposals during the consultation period.

Meals (Pupil Statistics)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the October 1988 census figures for each local education authority for the number of (a) pupils present, (b) pupils taking paid meals, (c) pupils taking free meals, and (d) pupils taking meals in total.

Mr. Butcher: The figures are given in the table. They relate to maintained primary, secondary and special schools and are based on the number of pupils present in schools on the day in October 1988 on which the survey was carried out. As explained in my reply of 14 April, the full results of the survey are contained in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publication "School Meals Statistics at October 1988" which will shortly be available in the Library.

WALES

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Walker: The details are as follows:

(a) Total number in support grades: 111½.

(b) Two vacancies—both in London and vacant for over three months. However, following recent selection interviews it is hoped to fill these shortly.

(c) 7 casual appointments.

(d) The average number of hours overtime worked each week by each member of the Support Grade structure in the Welsh Office:—

London	6 hours
Elsewhere	0·5 hours

National Parks

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has had any discussions with, or representations from, county councils in Wales, or other interested bodies, concerning the future of the national parks in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None; but matters relating to future developments and to the planning system within national parks are frequently the subject of representations to Ministers by a variety of bodies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sittings (Staff)

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed answering on behalf of the House of Commons Commission, what staff of the House are employed in the House when sittings go beyond 10 pm.

Mr. Beith: 128 staff from various Departments are on duty on any one night as a direct consequence of the House sitting after 10 pm.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Elections (Proportional Representation)

95. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing a system of proportional representation for elections to those directly elected bodies for which he is responsible.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to introduce a system of proportional representation for elections to local government councils.

Motor Vehicle Offences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of all circulars he has issued about the operation of section 37 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, within the last six months.

Mr. John Patten: Copies of Home Office circular number 86/88 and the second commencement order have been placed in the Library.

Grand National

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many jockeys have been injured while riding a horse in the Grand National at Aintree racecourse in the last nine years;

(2) how many jockeys have been permanently maimed after sustaining injuries while riding a horse in the Grand National at Aintree racecourse since 1959;

(3) how many jockeys have been killed during, or as a result of riding a horse, in the Grand National at the Aintree racecourse since 1959;

(4) how many horses have been killed during, or as a result of running in, the Grand National at Aintree racecouse since 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office does not obtain or record information about injuries incurred in horseracing. But the Jockey Club has kindly provided the four numbers requested, as follows: 5; 0; 0; 4.

Chief Superintendent Kenneth Etheridge (Inquiry)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement as to the most recent inquiry carried out in the case of former Chief Superintendent Kenneth Etheridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the most recent inquiry was in 1977, when an investigation was carried out into allegations against a number of officers, including Mr. Etheridge. No formal disciplinary proceedings were taken against any officer as a result of that inquiry.

Lotteries

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if legal proceedings will be taken against any seller or promoter of West German lottery tickets in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Government propose to introduce legislation to clarify the legal position with regard to the selling of non-British lottery tickets within the United Kingdom prior to 31 December 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is an offence under section 2 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 to bring foreign lottery tickets into Great Britain for the purpose of their sale, distribution or advertisement; we have no reason to believe that the position will be affected by the advent of the single European market in 1992. We have no plans to introduce legislation to amend the 1976 Act.

Any decision on whether to institute proceedings in respect of an alleged offence under the 1976 Act is a matter for individual chief officers of police. The Crown Prosecution Service is then responsible for deciding independently whether the case should be prosecuted in the courts.

Saudi Arabia (Visit)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he met and what was discussed on his recent visit to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Hurd: I had a number of meetings with senior members of the Saudi Arabian Government and discussed the scope of intensifying the level of co-operation between this country and Saudi Arabia in a number of fields, including terrorism, drugs, organised crime and police training. I signed a memorandum of understanding with the Saudi Arabian Government to facilitate closer co-operation on these issues.

Police (Mutual Assistance)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist for co-ordinating requests from chief officers of police for mutual aid assistance from other forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Mutual aid between police forces has for many years been a feature of British policing. Standing local arrangements for mutual aid are often used and do not require central co-ordination. When the demands on manpower or other resources are such that these arrangements are unlikely to be adequate, requests for assistance may be co-ordinated nationally by the mutual aid co-ordination centre (MACC) which was previously known as the national reporting centre.

The centre is activated and controlled by the president of the Association of Chief Police Officers and not by the Home Office. Day-to-day operations are the responsibility of an officer of deputy chief constable rank, assisted by supporting staff. When the MACC is in operation, as at all other times, the direction and control of police operations within a force area, including the control of officers provided under mutual aid, is the responsibility of the chief officer of police for that area. The MACC is responsible for co-ordinating requests from chief officers: it does not have the power to take the initiative in moving police officers from one force area to another.

The Home Office is today issuing a circular to chief officers of police and police authorities about the mutual aid co-ordination centre. I have placed a copy in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marre Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General from what outside sources with practical experience of the subjects considered by the Marre committee advice has been sought in the preparation of the Government's response to the Marre committee; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Marre committee was set up by the Bar and the Law Society and reported directly to them. The three Green Papers laid before Parliament on 25 January 1989 contain the Government's own provisional proposals relating to the requirements for carrying out in the future the work presently conducted by the legal profession; and are not a response to the Marre committee's report.

Baby C

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will seek the permission of the Court of Appeal to place in the Libarary a copy of the medical report considered in the recent Baby C case.

The Attorney-General: No.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Business Investment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of business investment in the economy.

Mr. Major: The latest figures show that business investment was 14·3 per cent. higher in real terms in 1988 than in 1987.

Economic Data

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he proposes to take to improve the quality of economic statistical data published by his Department.

Mr. Major: The Treasury, Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue are currently involved, with the Central Statistical Office and other departments, in implementing specific recommendations on improving the quality of Government economic statistics included in the recent scrutiny report. The report, copies of which are available in the Library, also made recommendations about the inter-departmental arrangements for the production of Government economic statistics. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 5 April at columns 190-91, the establishment of a separate Government Department, responsible to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, bringing together the work of the Central Statistical Office, the Business Statistics Office and some parts of the statistical work of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Employment. These changes are designed to achieve a significant improvement in the quality and relevance of Government economic statistics.

Customs and Excise Management Act 1979

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which the commissioners of Customs and Excise will disclose particulars of cases where proceedings for offences are compounded under section 152 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

Mr. Lilley: Section 152 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 is the most recent re-enactment of the commissioners' long-standing power to compound proceedings, that is to offer an alleged offender the option of paying a penalty out of court rather than be prosecuted. This power is used to resolve the majority of customs or excise offences, and enables them to be dealt with efficiently and effectively without burdening the courts or tying up Customs staff in lengthy court hearings. Hitherto, details of compounded settlements have not usually been made public.

The commissioners, having reviewed their policy on disclosure of compounded settlements, have decided that in respect of settlements made on or after 1 June 1989, details will be disclosed in the following circumstances:

It will be the Commissioners' invariable practice to disclose details

(a) to other Government Departments whose statutory responsibilities are directly affected; and

(b) to the courts for sentencing purposes after conviction, in cases where there has been an earlier compounded settlement for a similar matter within the time limits specified for offences by the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act.

The commissioners will also disclose compounded settlements under two other circumstances

(c) to employers when it is apparent that

(i) the nature of the employment has facilitated the offence; or

(ii) where drugs offences or indications of serious alcohol abuse are involved, the nature of the employment or duties requires a high degree of unimpaired judgement or faculties.

(d) in response to enquiries from Parliament or the media about cases which have excited public attention, if disclosure is considered to be in the public interest.

In all cases, persons considering an offer to compound for an alleged offence will be warned when the offer is made that details of the settlement may be disclosed in the circumstances set out at (a) to (d) above.

The commissioners have considered the recommendation of Lord Keith of Kinkel's committee on the "Enforcement Powers of the Revenue Departments" (Cmnd. 9440), that the names of all persons making compounded settlements and particulars of the settlements should be published, subject to discretion to withhold the names of persons making full spontaneous voluntary disclosure of their offences. The policy now to be adopted reflects the commissioners' conclusion that, other than in the particular circumstances already described, it would not be equitable or make the best use of their resources or those of the courts to depart from the present general principle of non-disclosure. The commissioners' general policy of non-disclosure of details of their dealings in individual cases will therefore continue to apply to cases which do not come within the circumstances described above.

I am satisfied with this outcome of the commissioners' review.

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any contingency measures to prevent damaging financial upheavals in the event of incorrect retail prices index figures being published as a result of unauthorised penetration of the computer systems.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Employment on security of RPI computer systems. It is not our practice to comment on contingency plans.

SCOTLAND

Home Improvements

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, giving the relevant statutory references, the home improvement grant orders currently in operation; and if he will indicate against each the policy objective, the level of grant, the amount of expenditure incurred each year of operation and the number of homes estimated to be improved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The primary objective of home improvement grants is to facilitate the improvement and repair of the existing private sector housing stock. The information available, from 1982 onwards, is given in the table. The statutory references are to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are grant schemes available to council house tenants for home improvements which they can take up independently of their council landlord.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: House improvement and repairs grants are, in principle, available to all tenants, although they may be given only with the approval of the local authority, both as landlord and as grant-giving authority.

Riverside Tenants' Hall

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received any request to continue with a central Government contribution to the Riverside tenants' hall, Govan.

Mr. Lang: The Riverside tenants' hall in Govan has received Government support through the urban programme for the maximum period of seven years, ending in 1990. Further support from public funds is a matter for the local authority.

Rent Phasing

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what statutory authority rent phasing was operated for tenants of housing associations; for how many years it operated; and what consultations took place about its ending.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 58 of the Rent (Scotland) Act (which consolidated previous legislation) is the statutory authority under which rent increases for secure tenants of housing associations may be phased. These rent increases have been eligible for phasing for 16 years. Paragraphs 23 and 26 of the consultation paper "The Private Rented Sector: The Government's Legislative Proposals for Scotland", issued in November 1987, set out the Government's proposals to move towards the abolition of phasing of rent increases for both secure tenants of housing associations and private sector regulated tenants. This proposal was fully debated during the passage through Parliament of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988.

Tourism

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the effect of section 4 financial assistance on the Scottish tourist industry.

Mr. Lang: Over the last three financial years the Scottish tourist board has approved assistance for 337 projects amounting to £12·4 million under its section 4 programme. The total private sector investment represented by these projects is £84 million.

Health Education

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the budget of the Scottish Health Education Group, formerly the Scottish Health Education Unit and Scottish Council for Health Education in each financial year from 1978-79 to 1988-89, expressed as actual expenditure and as a percentage of the total Scottish Health Service spending in each of the specified years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure by the Scottish Health Education Group since 1978-79 is shown in the following table:

Financial year	SHEG expenditure £000	Percentage of NHS expenditure in Scotland
1978-79	1,064	0·119

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all health boards which operate a computerised call-recall cervical cytology programme for all women aged 20 to 65 years at three yearly intervals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 April 1989]: Borders health board.

Community Charge

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether poll tax registration officers are currently empowered to request lists of school pupils' parents names and addresses from local authority education departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 April 1989]: Under section 17(3)(b) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, community charges registration officers may require the regional or islands council and any district council in their registration areas to supply them with such information as they may reasonably require in connection with their functions, being information which the local authorities have in connection with any of their functions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farm and Horticulture Development Scheme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount, in grants, paid out by the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, under the farm and horticulture development scheme in each of the years since 1974 to applicants from each of the parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Grants paid for years 1975 to 1977 are available only for Northern Ireland as a whole. Thereafter the information is not available by parliamentary constituency, but is on a county basis.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where the 10 confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy were found in Northern Ireland; and what has been done to prevent further outbreaks and to uncover the causes of this disease in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There have now been 13 confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) in various parts of the Province. It would not be appropriate to identify individual producers because of the need to respect confidentiality as a normal part of the Department of Agriculture's eradication and control policy for any animal disease outbreaks.

The BSE outbreaks have been fully investigated and there is nothing to suggest that the cause is any different from that in Great Britain cases.

In order to minimise the risk of outbreaks of this disease increasing, the Southwood committee's recommendations have been implemented in full.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's standards for maintenance with respect to grass cutting, sweeping, scavenging of laybys, windblown litter and the emptying of gullies on trunk roads maintained by county councils as agents of his Department; and if he will review those standards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Standards for litter clearance on the worst littered sections of motorways are being re-examined.

Standards for these and other routine maintenance activities are set out in the Department's code of practice for routine maintenance. A copy of the code is in the House Library. The code is kept under continual review in consultation with the Department's agents through the Standing Committee on Highway Maintenance. The application of the code is also reviewed at local level and individual standards are adjusted to meet particular circumstances.

Buses

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many bus routes in London have been put out to competitive tender; and what consequent cost reductions have been achieved.

Mr. Portillo: I understand from London Regional Transport that to date it has put 135 bus routes out to competitive tender. It estimates that this has achieved savings of around 15 per cent. of previous operating costs.

Midland Main Line

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to obtain a copy of the report by consultants commissioned by east midlands local authorities on the future of the midland main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have made it clear that I would be interested to see the results of the study commissioned by a group of local authorities on the future of the midland main line. It is for the local authorities to decide whether to send it to me.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Coben: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what connection the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee has with his Department; what representations he has received from the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee that concessionary fares on buses might be means-tested in future; what other representations, including those opposed to this suggestion, he has received; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee is a statutory body, established under the Transport Act 1985, with responsibility for giving advice to the Secretary of State on matters relating to the transport needs of disabled people. In July 1988, DPTAC submitted a report to the Secretary of State on "Finance for Extra Markets for Public Transport". One of the recommendations in this report was that local authorities should consider targeting their expenditure on concessionary fares more closely to those most in need of such benefits, including in particular those with a mobility handicap. The report did not specifically propose means-testing. We have, however, received a number of letters expressing concern that means-testing for concessionary fares might be introduced.

As the Government confirmed in their reply to the DPTAC report, it will be for local authorities to decide whether to make any changes in their present arrangements in the light of the proposals in the report.

London Buses

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the timetable he envisages for the privatisation of London Buses.

Mr. Portillo: No timetable has been set.

Vehicle Reversing (Accidents)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reportable accidents arising from reversing vehicles have resulted in injuries and deaths for each year since 1979; if he is able to categorise these into vehicle types; and how many have taken place (a) on the highway and (b) off the highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tables show the total number of accidents where at least one vehicle was reversing; those where at least one of the reversing vehicles was a car; and those where at least one of the reversing vehicles was a heavy goods vehicle. Only accidents on public highways are reported to the Department.

Accidents involving reversing vehicles: GB: 1979-1987

Vehicle Reversing Equipment

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many European Community countries require reversing safety systems to be fitted on vehicles;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring reversing safety systems to be fitted on all new vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if in the light of the mounting level of accidents caused while vehicles are reversing, he will consider requiring large commercial vehicles to be fitted with the latest technology to enable obstacles to be detected in the path of a reversing vehicle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to introduce legislation requiring any class of vehicle to be fitted with reversing safety systems. We know of no such legislation in any member state of the European Community.

Audible reversing alarms are permitted to be used on the road as a safety aid on buses, goods vehicles over 2 tonnes gross weight, refuse vehicles, engineering plant and works trucks.

There are very few serious injury accidents involving vehicles in reverse gear. Most drivers follow the very clear advice given in the "Highway Code."

Road Assessment Proposals

93. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having on the road assessment proposals for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants for the London assessment studies are currently assessing and testing a wide range of options. These do not constitute new proposals by the Department for roads or rail routes.

In my many discussions with hon. Members, councillors, and local groups I have taken the opportunity to correct misconceptions about the status of the studies and counter the scare stories about new motorways all over London.

In particular, I have been discussing the inaccuracies and misleading statements associated with a demonstration on 21 April.

Each year in London, nearly 500 people die and 50,000 are injured on London's roads. Both public and private transport assessments should help to cut this toll.

Shipping Accidents (Pollution)

94. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's role in minimising the effect of pollution after accidents at sea.

Mr. Portillo: The Department of Transport, through its marine pollution control unit exercises the responsibility accepted by Government in 1969 following the Torrey Canyon disaster, for dealing with pollution at sea arising from a shipping accident.

Contracted aerial and vessel dispersant spraying resources, oil recovery equipment or cargo transfer equipment is deployed, as both necessary and practicable, for the clean-up at sea of oil from an accident which threatens United Kingdom coastal, fishery, seabird, ecological amenity or other interests.

The Secretary of State has wide statutory powers to give directions or to take direct action to counter pollution following marine accidents. These extend from directing the owner of a ship, the master or the salvor in possession to take or refrain from taking action of any kind whatsoever, to taking control of the ship or sinking or destroying it.

Traffic Management (Greater London)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria have been adopted by the unit of his Department concerned with traffic management in Greater London for substitution of automatic, or semi-automatic, traffic signals by police on the occasion of routine maintenance works at critical locations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During the routine maintenance works at critical locations, permanent traffic signals are maintained wherever possible. Manual traffic control is provided by police officers or traffic wardens when signals are disconnected for short periods. Where a safe electricity supply exists, temporary signals can be provided if work is likely to take longer than one week.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the arrangements made for traffic control in East India Dock road adjacent to the northern entrance of the Blackwall tunnel over the weekend of 15 and 16 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There were some delays on the A13 and for traffic leaving the Blackwall tunnel on 15 and 16 April. The immediate cause was work on East India Dock road to construct an additional lane to improve access from the A13 to the Isle of Dogs.

Advance notice of the roadworks was given to motoring information services. The police were fully involved. We are satisfied that traffic management at this difficult site has been organised as well as the limitations allow.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what study has been made by his Department, or what conclusions he has reached, concerning the effect on traffic flows of one-person operated buses in Greater London; what effects he expects on traffic flow from the extension of one-person operations to bus routes presently using a crew of two; what advice or instructions he has given to London Regional Transport or London Buses Limited in respect of this policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The statutory duty to provide bus services in London lies with London Regional Transport and it is for it and its subsidiary, London Buses Ltd., to determine the method of operation, having due regard to efficiency, economy and safety. They take into account boarding times and congestion effects in their appraisal of conversions to one-person-operation. I understand they have no plans for any significant increase in the proportion of routes served by one-person-operated buses.

Road Accidents

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the number of (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal accidents involving heavy goods vehicles and long distance lorry drivers for each year from 1979 to the last available year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the number of fatal and non-fatal accidents involving heavy goods vehicles for each year from 1979 to 1987.

Total fatal and non-fatal accidents involving heavy goods vehicles: Great Britain: 1979-1987

	Fatal	Non-fatal	Total
1979	940	15,531	16,471
1980	782	13,335	14,117
1981	761	12,522	13,283

1986	794	12,635	13,429
1987	776	12,866	13,642

We cannot distinguish from the Stats19 accident report form whether the driver is a long-distance driver or not.

Road Junction (Walton on Thames)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the proposed Surrey county council (No. 5) CPO (1988) for the junction of the A244/C155/D3830 at Walton on Thames.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are two outstanding objections which are being considered.

TGV Atlantique Line

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request a copy of the report from SNCF on noise resulting from its surveys of the TGV Atlantique line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I understand that British Rail has a copy of the report which we believe my hon. Friend has in mind. In drawing up a national noise standard we shall wish to be aware of any standards adopted elsewhere, even where trains run much faster than BR plans for the United Kingdom.

Channel Tunnel

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the options outlined in the South Circular assessment study on the projected increase in freight traffic on the south London rail link from the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 April 1989]: Assessment of options is a matter for the study consultants. They are discussing the potential impact of options with the transport operators.

EMPLOYMENT

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the effect of the increase of petrol prices on the prices index over the past 12 months.

Mr. Lee: Over the 12 months ending in March 1989 the retail prices index increased by 7·9 per cent. The increase in petrol prices over the same period contributed approximately one fifth of one percentage point to this increase.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many miners he estimates are or have been exposed to noise levels above 90 dBA during the past 10 years; and what is his estimate of the proportion of those so exposed who are likely to suffer hearing damage.

Mr. Nicholls: Information regarding the number of miners who have been exposed to these noise levels is not available.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been employed as contractors for or on behalf of British Coal in each of the past five years; and what proportion of these individuals have suffered injury in each of those years.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available and could only be obtained, if at all, at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if dust levels experienced in underground operations have increased in recent years.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1977-78 British Coal's annual progress report on respirable dust shows a downward trend in the average national dust levels. However, in 1987-88 there was a small increase of 3·8 per cent. over 1986-87 levels. Cutting coal at the face is by far the major generator of dust in mining operations and since 1985-86 the average daily output per coal face has risen by 39 per cent.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of underground fires recorded at collieries during each year since 1979 and the number of those associated with conveyors.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is set out in the table.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984-85[1]	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proportion of miners who suffered disability after working underground for 25 years or more.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the rate of serious injury among mine workers and the proportion of the labour force this represented in (a) 1968, (b) 1978 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is supplied in the table.

[1] Provisional.
Source: British Coal Corporation and Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice he has been given by Her Majesty's inspectors in regard to the use of roof bolts in underground mining operations.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has not received any advice from the Health and Safety Executive on this subject.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of accidents involving major injury have occurred in the last hour of the working shift in underground employment.

Mr. Nicholls: The information on accident rates does not include details of the relative time in a shift when an accident occurred. However, British Coal conducted a 12-month survey on this topic from April 1986 to April 1987. This showed that of the total of 993 major accidents in that period only 33 occurred in the last hour of a shift. This is less than 4 per cent. of the total.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what duties he expects to be carried out by the proposed pit supervisors; and what differences will exist in practice and statutory requirement in comparison with those currently exercised by colliery deputies.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend understands that the Health and Safety Commission is currently considering proposals relating to the management and administration of health and safety at mines. Because the proposals are still in a formative stage it is not possible now to state what duties will be carried out by pit supervisors, nor how the future role of deputies will differ from their present role, if at all.

Health and Safety

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 19 April, if he will list those industries in which he estimates there is a significant number of accidents which are unreported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: All cases of fatal injury in the course of work activity are reported to the enforcement authorities. It is not known what proportion of other reportable injuries go unreported, nor is there any firm evidence to suggest that the problem is more acute in certain industries. There are some indications, however, that the agricultural, construction and service sector are subject to significantly more under-reporting than the best estimate of 50 per cent. for employees in all industries and services.

Employees (Public Duties)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being taken to ensure that employees are allowed time off for public duties under sections 29, 30 and 32 of the Employment Protection Act 1978, as amended by the Employment Act 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: An employee may present a complaint to an industrial tribunal that he has not been permitted to take time off. The services of ACAS are also available. An explanatory booklet may be obtained from offices of the Department.

Action for Jobs Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations have been received from (a) trades unions representing Government information officers and (b) individual officials, concerning the preparation and dissemination of material relating to the action for jobs programme.

Mr. Cope: I have no record of any such representations.

ENVIRONMENT

Community Charge

13. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of implementing the community charge in England.

Mr. Gummer: Our estimate of the costs, for both capital and revenue expenditure, of implementing the community charge in 1989-90 in England, based on the Price Waterhouse report, is between £209 million (if all authorities work as efficiently as the most efficient in their category) and £277 million (if authorities maintain their current efficiency). These estimates were at November 1987 prices.

18. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the average community charge in each local authority in 1989-90; and if he will make figures available arranged by reference to the controlling party in each such authority.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published once the data needed from local authorities have been received and analysed. To help my hon. Friend, we shall include details of the controlling parties, drawn from the standard reference works.

23. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish tables showing the community charge in each local authority area if introduced in 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published once data needed from local authorities have been received and analysed.

45. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has made available to explain the workings of the community charge to the general public.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has issued a general booklet entitled "You and the community charge: your step by step guide" explaining the whole community charge system. He is also publishing six supplementary leaflets on individual aspects of the community charge. One of these, on exemptions, is already available. The others will cover rebates, the appeal system, the collective community charge, students and the community charge, and second homes. These will be issued over the next few weeks. All of these publications are being made available on request free of charge. In addition my right hon. Friend will send a short leaflet on the community charge to every household in England in May.

49. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the average community charge if implemented on 1 April 1989.

64. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish exemplifications showing what the community charge would have been if introduced on 1 April 1989.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published once data needed from local authorities have been received and analysed.

59. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Audit Commission's assessment of the level of benefits to be derived by local authorities from the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission has made no such assessment.

65. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's planned publicity campaign for the commencement of community charge registration in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 20 January and 17 April this year.

67. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has made any recent assessment of the level of inability to pay the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The community charge is designed to reflect ability to pay. Rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the charge will be available to those on low incomes, and for those on the lowest incomes, income support will include an amount specifically to help with the remaining 20 per cent.

79. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to exempt severe dementia sufferers from payment of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to do so and will write to the hon. Member giving my reasons.

Petrol

14. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the current level of duty differential between leaded and unleaded petrol on sales of unleaded petrol.

21. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of demand for unleaded petrol in (a) January 1987 and (b) the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Uptake figures for the first full month after the Budget increase in duty differential in favour of unleaded petrol will not be available until the end of April. In the month to mid-March unleaded petrol accounted for 6·4 per cent. of the market. I understand from the United Kingdom Petroleum Industries Association that its provisional figures for the whole of March show a market share (on a slightly different basis) of 9·3 per cent. This amounts to more than a hundredfold increase since figures were first made available in April 1987.

26. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of garages in England now stock unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There has been a tenfold increase in outlets for unleaded petrol since March of last year and the United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association advises me that 38 per cent. of filling stations now stock the fuel.

76. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of demand for unleaded petrol at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) today.

Bristol Channel (Pollution)

15. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the position over pollution from existing and planned new sewerage outlets into the Bristol channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Nineteen bathing waters along the Bristol channel coast are identified under the EEC bathing water directive. In the 1988 bathing water season, 10 of these met the directive's mandatory coliform standards. The existing sewerage outlets are operating satisfactorily and a number of new schemes are planned which will bring about local improvements to water quality in the Bristol channel.

Housing

16. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last made a speech outlining his Department's plans for improving housing in rural areas.

Mr. Ridley: My ministerial colleagues and I frequently refer in speeches to our policies of increasing the supply of affordable housing in rural areas.

22. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the housing completion figure for 1979 in the public and private sectors; and what is the latest available figure.

Mr. Trippier: In 1979, 91,100 public sector and 118,400 private sector dwellings were completed in England. Provisional figures for 1988 are 24,800 and 159,900 respectively.

Urban Development Corporations

17. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations have consulted the local authorities in their area on their budget for 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: Consultation on UDC budgets is not appropriate: their money is voted by Parliament. UDCs are required, however, to draw up a code of practice as to consultation with the local authorities in their areas on the exercise of their powers.

39. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations have established procedures for meeting local community organisations.

Mr. Trippier: All UDCs except central Manchester and Bristol have developed arrangements for liaising with community organisations. Central Manchester and Bristol are still formulating their arrangements.

68. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is his intention that urban development corporations should seek to agree a set of objectives about regeneration with local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government encourage co-operation between urban development corporations and local authorities to help UDCs secure the regeneration of their designated areas. UDCs are required, under section 140 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, to prepare codes of practice as to consultation with their local authorities.

73. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations use existing local plans as a basis for undertaking their regeneration task.

Mr. Ridley: There are local plans covering parts of all urban development areas, except Trafford park. UDCs take them into account when preparing strategies for the regeneration of their areas.

81. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which urban development corporations open their planning committees to the public.

Mr. Trippier: London Docklands development corporation holds its planning meetings in public. We understand Bristol and Sheffield development corporations also intend to do so.

Council Tenants (Three Rivers)

19. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the decision of Three Rivers council tenants to reject a transfer to Chess Valley housing association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have received no such representations.

Football Spectators Bill

24. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the Football Spectators Bill.

Mr. Moynihan: By 17 April I had received 59 representations in favour and 3,991 against the Football Spectators Bill.

Local Authority Expenditure

25. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated net saving in terms of public expenditure as a result of the measures taken over the past 10 years to restrict expenditure by local authorities.

Mr. Gummer: We have taken a number of measures to restrict expenditure by local authorities which have resulted in substantial savings over the past 10 years.

Drinking Water

27. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to ensure that the Thames water authority supplies a high quality standard of drinking water after privatisation.

Mr. Moynihan: The Water Bill contains proposals for a comprehensive new system for safeguarding and improving the quality of water supplies. This will include tight quality standards, frequent sampling, the establishment of a drinking water quality inspectorate, and requirements to provide full information to consumers on the quality of water they receive.

Water Privatisation

28. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the debt incurred on and management of Kielder water in relation to privatisation of the Northumbrian water authority.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Rivers Authority will enter into an agreement with Northumbrian water authority's successor company to deal with the operation of Kielder as a water resource asset. Under the terms of clause 83 of the Water Bill, there will be a general debt restructuring of all water authorities prior to flotation.

51. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposed safeguards for consumers contained in the proposals for the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Howard: After privatisation our comprehensive new charter for customers would for the first time give consumers rights on the quality of water they drink, the charges they pay, and the standard of service they receive. As part of this I am pleased to announce that public consultation today begins on the draft regulations for the guaranteed standards scheme. This is a no nonsense, no quibble scheme providing a spur to management to ensure the best commercial practices. Domestic customers will be automatically entitled to a payment or credit of £5 for every day, or each occasion, on which a breach of one of the standards of service occurs. This will avoid the frustration customers at present experience because they cannot obtain any compensation in such cases.

The scheme covers:

—delays beyond the period notified by the company for restoring water supplies following a planned interruption of supply;

—delays of more than 24 hours in restoring water supply following an unplanned interruption which has been notified to the company (72 hours in the case of a burst strategic main);

—appointments which are not kept on the day specified by the company to the customer;

—failure to provide a substantive answer to written enquiries about bills, or requests for alternative methods of payment within 20 and 10 working days respectively;

—failure to answer written complaints about water supply or sewerage services by providing an answer within 10 working days, and a substantive answer within 20 working days if the matter requires a site inspection or further investigations.

I will place copies of the draft regulations of the guaranteed standards scheme in the House Library along with copies of the Government's leaflet "Customer Standards and Consumer Rights".

Litter

29. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for ensuring that local authorities carry out effectively their duties on litter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are considering placing a duty on local authorities to clean public areas, having regard to codes of practice which the Government would issue. We are also looking at ways of enabling local authorities to enforce the Litter Act more effectively.

37. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of his campaign to reduce litter in the streets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The clean nineties campaign launched by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and being developed by the Tidy Britain group is proceeding well. I and other Ministers have been associated with projects and other activities designed to increase public awareness of the problem and involvement in solutions.

We expect the Tidy Britain group's projects to result in codes of practice, setting standards of cleanliness, in time for the launch of Tidy Britain Year-1990.

We will shortly be reviewing the City of Westminster's fixed penalty scheme for littering to see whether it should be extended nationally. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport launched a £1 million litter clearing campaign on 17 March and is monitoring the standards in his Department's code of practice for routine maintenance of roads.

Association of District Councils

30. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Association of District Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the local associations, including the Association of District Councils, on 29 November 1988. The subjects discussed were the new system of local authority capital finance and the Government's proposals for the treatment of local authorities interests in companies.

Rates

31. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those district councils which have increased their rates by 50 per cent. in the last year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are two authorities: Basildon increased its rates by 57·2 per cent. in 1989-90; Brighton increased its rates by 56·7 per cent. in 1989-90.

Chlorofluorocarbons

32. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what date he expects the United Kingdom to meet the Montreal protocol target of a 50 per cent. reduction in the use of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Montreal protocol requires cuts of 50 per cent. in the consumption of cholorofluorocarbons (CFCs) by 1999. We expect this to have been achieved by the United Kingdom by the end of this year, 10 years ahead of schedule.

61. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he intends to take to diminish the use and encourage the recycling and safe disposal of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Environment Council of the European Community has, in response to a United Kingdom initiative, called for the Montreal protocol to be strengthened so as to require production and consumption of chlorofluorocarbons to be reduced by 85 per cent. as quickly as possible with a view to their elimination by the end of the century. We shall be pressing for this to be agreed as the protocol is reviewed over the next 12 months. Such a change would give further impetus to the search for and application of substitutes and to the recycling of existing CFCs. The question of the safe destruction of CFCs will be considered by the parties to the Montreal protocol at their first meeting in Helsinki next month.

Competitive Tendering

33. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the benefits to be gained by local authorities from competitive tendering in 1989-90.

Mr. Gummer: The Department will shortly be letting a research contract to monitor and evaluate the effects of the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988. The statutory deadline for the first round of services to be exposed to competition is 1 August 1989. Previous studies have therefore necessarily examined the effects of voluntary competition; these have found savings of 20 to 30 per cent. of previous costs without any reduction in standards.

European Soccer

34. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between the Minister responsible for sport and his European counterparts regarding the readmittance of English clubs to European soccer competition.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not discussed the re-admission of English football clubs to UEFA competitions with my European counterparts. The matter was discussed at the meeting of the Standing Committee on the European Convention on Spectator Violence on 13 and 14 April. The Standing Committee welcomed UEFA's decision to re-admit English clubs in the 1990-91 season subject to the conditions laid down by UEFA.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the president of the Union of European Football Associations to discuss the re-entry of English football clubs to European competition.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the President of UEFA has said that he will seek a meeting with me next April to discuss the re-admission of English clubs to Europe in the 1990-91 season. I shall be happy to meet him.

Global Warming

35. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has undertaken to assess the effect of global warming on coastal communities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In June 1988 the Department published a series of desk studies on "Possible Impacts of Climate Change on the Natural Environment in the United Kingdom". The report identified a number of research requirements for assessing those impacts. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. Further studies are now proceeding, including studies on the implications for sea defences.

Denis Wild-type Houses

36. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in encouraging building societies to offer advances on Denis Wild-type houses.

Mr. Trippier: Good progress is being made in improving the mortgage ability of all non-traditional house types. If the hon. Member has a specific problem in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Water Authorities

38. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairmen of the water authorities; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend and I met the chairmen of the water authorities on 24 April. Various matters of mutual interest were discussed.

Bathing Waters

40. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many bathing waters were designated for the purposes of the European bathing waters directive in (a) May 1979 and (b) May 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: No United Kingdom bathing waters had been indentified in May 1979 under the EEC bathing water directive. In May 1988, 397 coastal bathing waters had been identified. These are listed in the Official Report for 5 May 1988 at column 536 for Scotland, and at columns 571-577 for England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Widdecombe Report

41. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making on implementing those recommendations of the Widdecombe report which do not require primary legislation.

Mr. Gummer: We have established join working groups with the local authority associations to prepare a new set of model standing orders for local authorities; and to revise the national code of local government conduct.

Empty Properties

42. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of empty residential properties in the private sector in England and Wales.

82. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for empty residential properties in the private sector in Inner London for April 1987 and April 1988.

Mr. Trippier: This information is reported by English local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIPI). It is shown at column A84 of "Grossed Estimates—HIPI" for 1987 and 1988. Copies of these documents are in the Library.

For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member for Manchester, Central to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

River Pollution

43. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about river pollution in Leicestershire.

Mr. Howard: River water quality in Leicestershire is generally of a high standard with most rivers being of good or fair quality. Some stretches of river in the Soar catchment, at present not meeting their quality objectives, will be improved by 1992 as a result of planned capital expenditure by Severn-Trent water authority to improve unsatisfactory sewage treatment works.

86. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the system of open regulation of river pollution was introduced.

Mr. Howard: Since 31 July 1985, the water authorities have kept public registers with details of applications for, and consents granted in respect of, discharges of effluent, both by the authorities themselves and by others. The registers also contain details of the results of the water authorities' sampling of effluent quality together with the results of their regular monitoring programmes for rivers and estuaries and coastal waters. The registers are kept in accordance with the Control of Pollution (Registers) Regulations 1985 and section 41 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Local Government Finance

44. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department has made in evaluating a system of local government finance based on a combination of capital value tax and a local income tax.

Mr. Gummer: We published figures illustrating the possible impact of such a system on 23 June 1988. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has undertaken to provide illustrative figures for any hon. Member who asks, on the same basis as those he quoted to my hon. Friends the Members for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) and for Kensington (Mr. Fishburn) on 25 January at column 1013.

Hazardous Wastes

46. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to respond to the recent Environment Select Committee report on hazardous wastes.

77. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an urgent response to the Environment Select Committee report on toxic and hazardous waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's response will be published as soon as possible.

Rating Reform

47. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the bill paid by a ward sister living in a typical property in Cambridge under a system of (a) community charge and (b) capital value rates plus local income tax.

Mr. Gummer: A ward sister earning £13,000 living in a property in Cambridge worth £50,000 would pay a community charge of £213 (disregarding the transitional safety net) and £465 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

Homelessness

48. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures of households accepted as homeless by local authorities following mortgage repossession for England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: In the quarter ending December 1988 local authorities accepted responsibility to secure accommodation for an estimated 1,800 households under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act, where the immediate reason for homelessness was mortgage arrears.

For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Council House Sales

50. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that delays on processing council house sales are reduced.

Mr. Trippier: As I announced in my answer of 10 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes), section 124 of the Housing Act 1988 came into force on that date. It enables tenants whose applications are delayed by the landlord to have rent payments put towards the purchase price of their home. Section 136 of the Act helps local authorities equip themselves to deal with applications by allowing them to use the proceeds of sales to meet the administrative costs.

Ozone Layer

52. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the protection of the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations regarding the protection of the ozone layer.

Single People (Housing)

53. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to increase the supply of housing for single young people in metropolitan areas.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have provided for an 80 per cent. increase over the next three years in the finance available to the Housing Corporation to provide new houses to rent and to promote low-cost home ownership including shared ownership. The deregulation of new private lettings will also encourage landlords to make more homes available to rent.

Nature Conservancy Council

54. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss environmental policies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ministers hold regular discussions with the Nature Conservancy Council which cover a range of issues affecting policies for nature conservation and the environment. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of the council on 26 January. Both my noble Friend the Earl of Caithness and I have met the chairman and the deputy chairman at meetings held during the last three months.

Housing Action Trust

55. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the common problems identified by the consultants in proposed housing action trust areas.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 16 March at column 322 announcing the publication of the consultants' reports on the proposed housing action trust areas. Copies of the consultants' reports on all the proposed areas were placed on that day in the Libraries of both Houses.

56. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of carrying out the consultant's report on the proposed housing action trust area in Sunderland.

Mr. Trippier: The cost of carrying out the report on the proposed Sunderland housing action trust will amount to £198,233, including VAT, when all bills have been paid. This figure covers consultants' fees and the cost of producing reports and leaflets about the proposal.

83. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will release the necessary funds to local authorities for improving the areas identified as potential housing action trusts.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have made extra public expenditure provision available for housing action trusts. It will be for tenants in the areas proposed for trusts to decide whether they wish my right hon. Friend to proceed with the orders necessary to set them up.

Rates

57. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase in domestic rates from 1 April.

80. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase in (a) domestic rates and (b) non-domestic rates from 1 April 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average increase in the domestic rates of local authorities in England in 1989-90 is 9·3. The average increase in non-domestic rates is 7·8 per cent.

Sports Council

58. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall be meeting the outgoing chairman, John Smith and the chairman designate, Peter Yarranton, during May. We will discuss a number of issues relating to sport.

Isle of Dogs (Commercial Space)

60. Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of commercial space (a) completed, (b) under construction and (c) with planning permission in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone; and if he has an estimate of the total allowances they will be eligible for.

Mr. Trippier: As at 31 March the London Docklands development corporation estimated that 320,000 sq m of commercial floorspace has been constructed since 1981 with another 830,000 sq m under construction. Planning permission is not generally required in enterprise zones but the estimate of commercial floorspace committed in the Isle of Dogs EZ is a further 895,000 sq m.

Estimates of the cost of capital allowances to the Exchequer are based on the total level of investment in construction in enterprise zones and other national data; they are not available for individual zones.

Council Rents

62. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has calculated the effect on council rents of the proposals in the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Mr. Trippier: Under part VI of the Local Government and Housing Bill, local authorities will retain the responsibility for setting rents for their own properties. A number of factors can affect the levels at which councils choose to pitch their rents, including the determinations which my right hon. Friend will make each year as a basis for calculating entitlement for housing revenue account subsidy. A calculation of future rents can be made only one year at a time, when the relevant determinations have been made.

Homeless Families

63. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless families could be housed immediately if all void properties in the hands of local authorities were filled.

Mr. Trippier: At the latest date for which we have information, 1 April 1988, there were nearly 103,000 local authority dwellings empty in England. Of these, nearly 22,000 were available for immediate letting, and could thus, in theory, have taken every homeless family out of bed-and-breakfast accommodation twice over. However, the right dwellings are not all in the right place at the right time for homeless families. Nevertheless, it is urgent and essential for authorities to make effective use of their empty property. The new financial regime for local authority housing will increase the pressure on councils to do so.

London Housing Survey

66. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the report from the London research centre entitled "The London Housing Survey 1986-87"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. The Government's housing policies and, in particular the provisions in the Housing Act 1988, which are designed to secure a greater diversity of housing supply, will address many of the issues mentioned in the report.

Control of Pollution Act

69. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of implementation of the Control of Pollution Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The main provisions of the Act have all been implemented, with the exception of a few sections of part II which are contained in the water legislation currently before Parliament. The remaining provisions are either reserve powers or are now thought inappropriate.

Estates Programme

70. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have participated in the estates programme; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Over 200 local authorities in England have participated in discussions and received advice under our estate action initiative and by 31 March 1989, 110 had received additional resources totalling £260 million. A further £190 million is being made available under the estate action programme in the current financial year.

Housing Corporation

71. Mr. Samberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many regional offices of the Housing Corporation have now been established; and what resources have been committed to the corporation to ensure effective dissemination of the services available.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Corporation has nine regional offices in England. The Government are providing grant-in-aid of £19·8 million in 1989-90 to meet the administrative costs of the corporation in carrying out its functions.

Farmland

72. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much farmland was released for private housing in (a) 1968, (b) 1978 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not available. I gave my hon. Friend some MAFF data for 1958-68, 1968-78 and 1978-85 in my answer to him on 14 December. My Department's land use change data, which are not comparable with the MAFF series, show that in 1985-87 the average annual area of land recorded by the Ordnance Survey as changing from agricultural to urban use in England was around 5,500 hectares, of which around 3,400 hectares were for residential use. Figures for 1988 will be published later this year.

Empty Property

74. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to bring empty residential property in the private sector into Housing Association or local authority ownership on a temporary or permanent basis to provide homes for the homeless.

Mr. Trippier: No. We believe that the changes made by the Housing Act 1988 will encourage private landlords to let currently empty property.

Football Membership Scheme

75. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the president of the Football League and the chairman of the Football Association to discuss identity cards.

Mr. Moynihan: I hope to meet the chairman of the Football Association and the president of the Football League shortly.

Water Rates

78. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average increase in water authority and statutory water rates from 1 April.

Mr. Howard: I estimate that the average increase in all water charges is likely to be 9·8 per cent. for the water authorities and about 22 per cent. for the water companies. The average increase for all consumers is likely to be about 11 per cent. Information on the average rates levied on customers charged by rateable value is not yet available.

Housing (Transfers)

84. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for transfers of housing stock he has received under the provisions of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: None. Responsibility for the approval of applicants for the tenants' choice provisions in part IV of the Housing Act 1988 lies in England with the Housing Corporation under its powers in section 94. Once approved, and provided the applicant has secured the necessary degree of tenant support for its application and complied with the Housing Corporation's own procedures, applications can, under section 96 of the Act, be made direct to the appropriate public sector landlord.

Rural Housing

85. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received a copy of "A Practical Guide to Providing Affordable Rural Housing" by the national agricultural centre rural trust; and if he will make a statemet.

Mr. Trippier: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing attended the launch of the guide and congratulated the rural trust on its production. He commended it to all village communities which think a rural housing association might help meet housing needs in their area.

88. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that sufficient rented housing is available in rural areas at rents which those working in such areas can afford.

Mr. Trippier: We accept that there is a need for more affordable rented housing in some rural areas. We have therefore increased funding to the Housing Corporation to enable it to quadruple its programme of housing for rent in small villages to 1,100 houses a year. Recent changes to planning guidance, and Budget changes in the tax treatment of land given to housing associations, will also help in increasing the supply of rural housing at moderate rents.

Rents

87. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any information about changes in private sector rents since the introduction of assured tenancy provisions under the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: The provisions have been in force only three months and it is therefore too soon to assess their impact on rent levels.

Enterprise Zones

89. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent assessment his Department has made of the operation of enterprise zones.

Mr. Trippier: A study was carried out in 1986-1987, The report, "An evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment", was published in December 1987. A series of annual monitoring reports is also available. The latest of these, "Enterprise Zone Information 1986-87", was published on 18 April. Copies of these have been placed in the Library. A final evaluation of the zones will be commissioned shortly.

Local Development Plans

90. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has been able to gauge the response by local authorities with planning responsibilities to his Department's recent encouragement towards more precisely delineated local development plans.

Mr. Chope: My general impression is that many planning authorities have responded very positively to the advice given in PPG12, and have work in hand on preparing or updating their local plans. But a period of preparation and public consultation is required before draft plans can be formally placed on deposit, and it is not possible at this stage to gauge the full impact of PPG12.

Waste Paper

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to encourage the recycling of waste paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his policy is on the recycling of paper; and if he has issued any advice to councils and other public bodies on this matter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment is co-operating with the Department of Trade and Industry in setting up a series of seminars, involving local authorities and others to encourage paper recycling where it is economically viable. The first is in London on 3 May. We also encourage local authorities and others to use recycled paper and to recycle their own waste where economically viable. This Department has used recycled letter headed paper for some years along with paper for many other purposes which is made wholly or partly from recycled fibre.

Inner Cities (Housing)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided not to proceed with the research project on housing issues in inner city areas.

Mr. Trippier: The original research proposed proved to be too wide in scope but it is hoped to include elements of it in future research work.

Rural Areas (Housing)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to planning authorities on the effect of different forms of tenure on the availability of land for affordable housing developments in rural areas.

Mr. Trippier: No. My right hon. Friend made clear in his announcement of 3 February at columns 433-34 that planning conditions should not normally be used to impose restrictions on tenure. He emphasised that the details of arrangements to secure low cost housing for local needs are very much a matter for local decision, and that must include decisions as to what tenure or mix of tenures is appropriate to the particular circumstances of the area concerned.

Green Belt

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those parts of the metropolitan green belt with a width of less than 9 miles.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the map and description of the metropolitan green belt in my Department's booklet "The Green Belts" (HMSO, October 1988), a copy of which is in the Library.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the Nature Conservancy Council, together with the bodies appointing them and details of any of their links with field sports.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Members of the Nature Conservancy Council are appointed by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment. Members are appointed to the council for the personal contribution they can make to its work. They have a wide range of expertise and interests. The current members of the council are as follows:

Sir William Wilkinson, Chairman
Sir John Burnett, Deputy Chairman
Professor John Allen
Lord Blakenham
Professor David Bowen
Lord Buxton
Mr. John Cossins
The Earl of Dalkeith
Dr. Peter Evans
Professor John Knill
Miss Audrey Lees
Sir Hector Monro
Dr. Bill Mutch
Professor Gareth Owen
Earl Peel
Mr. James Teacher
Mr. Alexander Trotter
Mr. Lindsay Waddell
Mr. William Wilder

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has issued to the Nature Conservancy Council about the conditions which should be fulfilled by the National Trust, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Country Naturalist Trust for the issuing of grant-aid for the purchase of land.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the Hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 15 February at column 281.

Peak Park

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last visited the Peak park; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I last visited the Peak District national park on 12 April.

Village Greens

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has issued to local planning authorities in respect of considering planning applications or compulsory purchase orders affecting village greens.

Mr. Ridley: I have issued no planning guidance about village greens. Appendix G to my Department's circular 6/85 refers to compulsory purchase orders affecting commons and open spaces (which can include village greens). The Department also produces an advice note on compulsory acquisition of commons and open land.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the public inquiry reports submitted to him in the last five years, where a decision was made in (a) under three months, (b) under six months, (c) under one year and (d) over one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Information in the form requested cannot readily be obtained. Since 1984, I and my predecessors have issued 1,711 decisions on planning appeals following a public local inquiry, and approximately 70 per cent. of those decisions were issued within three months of the inspector's report being received. In 1988-89, 81 per cent. of such decisions were issued within three months.

House of Commons

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now completed his research into the lighting of the Chamber prior to its reconstruction in the 1940s referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) of 13 February, Official Report, column 30.

Mr. Chope: The research has established that, except for the first few months when gas chandeliers were used and found to be unsatisfactory, artificial light in Barry's Chamber was provided from panels in the ceiling. A report was provided last month to the Select Committee on the televising of the House and copies are being placed in the Library.

Control of Advertisements Regulations

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now give effect to the Government's proposals for amending and consolidating the Control of Advertisements Regulations.

Mr. Chope: As foreshadowed in the reply on 4 July last year, by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today laid before Parliament amending Control of Advertisements Regulations which modernise the present regulations and introduce some carefully considered de-regulatory provisions.

Among the new provisions two categories of illuminated advertisement are being permitted without first obtaining the local planning authority's prior consent. These are small signs on "business premises" and on commercial premises in "retail parks", where the sign consists of individual characters or letters, internally illuminated. Because illuminated signs on shops and other commercial premises can sometimes be garish and unsympathetic, or may confuse passers-by, safeguards will ensure that the advertisements permitted for display will not harm amenity or put vehicle drivers or pedestrians at risk. As an additional safeguard, this type of illuminated sign will not be permitted in any conservation area, national park, area of outstanding natural beauty or area of special control of advertisements.

These regulations will provide some worthwhile relaxation of the present unnecessarily restrictive rules, while at the same time maintaining essential safeguards for the quality of the built environment.

Peak Park (Planning Applications)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for starter homes have been refused by the Peak park planning board.

Mr. Trippier: Of the 11 planning applications for "starter homes" dealt with by the Peak park joint planning board since April 1984, five have been refused.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for his policy towards South Africa of the report on the rights of detainees and other matters, by the Black Sash women's rights group of South Africa; and if he will make arrangements for a copy of the report to be procured for his departmental library.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly receive information on human rights issued by Black Sash. The March issue of the Black Sash magazine is devoted to an overview of the current state of human rights in South Africa. We condemn all abuses of basic human rights wherever they occur.

United Kingdom Embassies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries at present do not have a United Kingdom embassy; what is the reason for the absence; and what steps are being taken to establish an embassy in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: As all the information necessary is not immediately available, a further reply will be sent to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

India (Missiles)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to the Indian Government over the implications for stability in the sub-continent of the planned programme of flight testing the Agni intermediate range ballistic missile in Orissa state.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Soviet Submarine (Sinking)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what detailed information was received from the Soviet Government, at what time, and through which channels, to assure Her Majesty's Government that the sinking of the Mike class Soviet nuclear submarine provided no radiological hazard to the North sea and Arctic ocean.

Mrs. Chalker: A message from Mr. Gorbachev to the Prime Minister informing her of the accident was passed on in the early hours of 8 April. In it he assured her that there was no leak of radioactivity and that none was expected. Detailed information to the same effect was passed by the Soviet permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna to that body at about 0545 BST on 8 April. This information was relayed to London through the British permanent representative's office at 0645 BST.

THE ARTS

"The Northern Region: Making Ends Meet"

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consideration he has given to the findings of the report published by the National Campaign for the Arts "The Northern Region: Making Ends Meet;" and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 25 April 1989]: The funding of regional arts associations is a matter for the Arts Council. I understand that the chairman of the Arts Council has already written to the National Campaign for the Arts about the report.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pension Fund

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the Government Actuary's valuation report on the parliamentary contributory pension fund will be laid before the House.

Mr. Wakeham: In accordance with section 5 of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1972, the Government Actuary's valuation report on the parliamentary contributory pension fund is being laid before the House today. The House will have an opportunity to debate the report and the Government will not take any decision on its recommendations until after that debate. The report includes a recommendation that the standard contribution for Members should be about 20 per cent. of salary, of which the Exchequer should contribute 11 per cent., while the Member's contribution should remain at 9 per cent. This compares with the position previously when the Exchequer contribution was set at 13 per cent. with a 5 per cent. supplement, during which time a substantial surplus has built up in the fund. This surplus would by convention normally be used to reduce the employers' contribution. The Actuary therefore recommended that the Exchequer contribution from April 1989 should fall to 4·4 per cent., returning to 11 per cent. from April 1997.

NATIONAL FINANCE

"The Inland Revenue and the Taxpayer"

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to initiate legislation, or consolidate legislation, as a consequence of the Board of Inland Revenue's consultative document entitled, "The Inland Revenue and The Taxpayer" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on behalf of the Board of Inland Revenue in December 1986.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Legislation was included in the Finance (No. 2) Act 1987 and the Finance Act 1988. Further clauses are contained in this year's Finance Bill which will substantially complete the legislation arising out of the proposals in the Inland Revenue's consultative document.

Consolidation of statute law is the responsibility of the Law Commission. A Bill consolidating the laws relating to capital allowances will be ready for introduction in the 1989-90 Session of Parliament. Work on further consolidations of tax law will then be put in hand.

Old Ships

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to remove the balancing charge under which a British ship owner when disposing of old ships pays to the Treasury one third of the proceeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion. Balancing charges are made to recover tax relief for depreciation given in excess of the depreciation actually experienced. Whether such a charge needs to be made and, if so, the amount of the charge depends on the particular circumstances of each individual case.

Investment Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in tabular form the amounts invested (a) in United Kingdom shares and (b) in foreign shares by (i) pension funds, (ii) insurance companies and (iii) unit trusts for each month from January 1979 to date.

Mr. Lilley: Information on the investment of financial institutions in United Kingdom and overseas company securities is published regularly in "Financial Statistics" —for pension funds in table 7.14, for insurance companies in table 7.13, and for unit trusts in table 7.11. The figures published show the market value of investments at the end of each calendar year, and the cash value of net acquisitions (purchases less sales) in each quarter. There is no monthly information.

Gilts

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amount of Government gilt edged securities sold by unit trusts, pension funds and insurance companies in each quarter since October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is published in "Financial Statistics"—for unit trusts in table 7.11, for pension funds in table 7.14, and for insurance companies in table 7.13.

EC Banking Directive

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the Council of Finance Ministers in considering the second banking directive; if it is the general purpose of the draft directive that banks approved by their own state should be permitted to seek deposits, to offer loans and to engage in the full business of retail banking in another member state; and if he will make a statement on the position of Her Majesty's Government on the directive.

Mr. Lilley: The draft second banking coordination directive, which the Government have welcomed in principle as an important step towards the creation of a single market in financial services. It will give credit institutions (broadly, banks and building societies) the right to establish a branch in, or provide cross-border services into, another member state on the basis of their home state authorisation. This right will extend to a wide range of banking services including those mentioned. The directive is currently under detailed consideration in a Council working group of representatives from the member states and the Commission. The Commission has recently made revised proposals for a reciprocity provision in the directive. The Council of Ministers had an initial discussion of these new proposals on 17 April, and they are being considered further.

Finance Bill

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the notes on those clauses of the Finance Bill to be taken in Committee of the whole House will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Major: Yes. The appropriate notes on clauses were placed in the Vote Office earlier today.

Computers

Miss. Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many instances have been detected in the Inland Revenue computer system of computer (a) hacking, (b) viruses, (c) logic bombs, (d) Trojan horses or (e) other types of computer misuse, whether perpetuated by authorised or unauthorised users of computers; and how many unsuccessful attempts have been recorded.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 April 1989]: It is not the policy of this Department to make public details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure, since such information would be of assistance to potential attackers.

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total income tax payment for (a) a single person on £40,000, (b) a married man with no children on £40,000 and (c) a married man with two children on £40,000 with no other allowances apart from the basic allowances; and what would be the total payments in each category if the standard rate of income tax for those earning £40,000 were raised to 50 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 April 1989]: The information is as follows:

Income tax liability[1] 1989-90 on income of £40,000

Category	Assuming 1989 Budget proposals £ p.a.	Assuming single rate of tax of 50 per cent. £ p.a.
(a) Single person	11,781·00	18,607·50
(b) Married man with no children	11,145·00	17,812·50
(c) Married man with two children[2]	10,391·00	17,058·50

[1] Assumes no other allowances apart from the basic personal allowances.
[2] Deducting child benefit of £7·25 per week per child.

Double Taxation (Ireland)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement indicating whether there have been any reviews of, or amendments to, the Treasury or Inland Revenue's interpretation of functions of a governmental nature covered by article 18(1) of the double taxation agreement with the Republic of Ireland; and if he will detail the date, content and status of any guidelines issued to Inland Revenue officials on such interpretation on and since the introduction of the double Taxation Agreement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1989]: There have been no reviews. The article concerned is common in form to many of our double taxation agreements and guidelines on it have been available for many years to officials. Any matters of particular difficulty are handled centrally.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement listing the functions of a governmental nature covered by article 18(1) of the double taxation agreement between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1989]: Where services are rendered directly to the Government or a local authority they are considered to involve the discharge of functions of a governmental nature. Where, however, services are rendered by employees to an agency, board or other statutory body, they are considered to render services to that agency, board or statutory body and not to the Government or a local authority.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

West Bank and Gaza Strip

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 20 April, columns 241-42, as to the aid over the last five years to the West Bank and Gaza Strip from (a) other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, (b) other European Economic Community countries and (c) other sources.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information on other donors' aid to the West Bank and Gaza is scarce. Our understanding is that France, Germany, Italy and Spain have programmes broadly comparable with that of the United Kingdom; that the United States of America provides substantially more; and that some other western donors maintain small programmes.

Outside the OECD and the European Community the eastern bloc and Arab donors provide some assistance, the former mainly through training awards. Among Arab donors Jordan was particularly active in the occupied territories until last year.

Among multilateral donors the European Community provided the equivalent of £5 million from 1981 to 1986 and some £2 million in each of 1987 and 1988. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees provided US$174·5 million in 1986, US$208·8 million in 1987 and US$216·4 million in 1988; these figures also include expenditure in Lebanon and refugee camps elsewhere in the region.

WALES

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department does not have any Siemens ND3 printers. Contracts which my Department has with private companies do not specify that particular printers should or should not be used.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made, in conjunction with the Welsh Language Board, in discussing the changes to legislation with regard to the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has already taken action via the Local Government and Housing Bill to allow local authorities in Wales to adopt the Welsh version of their official title. The Welsh Language Board has made good progress in considering a number of other areas where difficulties have arisen with regard to the use of Welsh in the past and my right hon. Friend will consider its proposals as they emerge.

ESA Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether ESA payments to farmers in Wales are made to those who are farming the relevant land whether as tenants or owner occupiers or to the landowners.

Mr. Peter Walker: ESA payments are made to the applicant who will usually be an owner-occupier or tenant of the land. Joint applications can be accepted from landlord and tenant.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has issued any guidelines on the effect on agricultural rents of ESA payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Agricultural rents are a matter for negotiation between landlord and tenant.

Health Service

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each health authority the percentage of consultant hours in each specialty which are contracted to (a) the National Health Service and (b) private practice.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by health authority the average number of National Health Service operations done by consultants in each specialty in each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available in the form requested.

The information shown in the following tables relates to the number of operative procedures performed in NHS hospitals, by specialty.

Teachers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish statistics for every local education authority in Wales showing the number of supply teachers registered for casual cover and showing what incremental point on the main professional grade for teachers' salaries a well-qualified and experienced supply teacher may progress to.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information about the numbers of supply teachers registered with local education authorities is not held centrally. However, the numbers of teachers employed in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools for periods of less than one month on an occasional or short notice basis as at January 1988 are shown in the following table:

	Number
Clwyd	173
Dyfed	90
Gwent	225
Gwynedd	74
Mid Glamorgan	139

	Number
Powys	68
South Glamorgan	191
West Glamorgan	54

These figures exclude supply teachers with contracted employment of one month or longer.

LES's have discretion to pay supply teachers up to the maximum of the main scale and may also award them incentive allowances, subject to the requirements contained in the school teachers pay and conditions document 1988.

Local Education Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the capital allocation to each local education authority and (b) the capital allocation to each local education authority as a percentage of the bid of that local education authority, in each of the last six years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The capital allocations (for all services) for the years 1984-85 to 1989-90 are shown in the following tables. Since 1985-86 capital allocations to Welsh local education authorities (counties) have not been hypothecated to individual services and have been based on formulae agreed with the local authority associations.

Details of bids and capital allocations for education, together with allocations for 1984-85 as a percentage of bids that year are shown in the following tables.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Projects

68. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of forestry projects currently taking place in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved 4,390 new applications for planting grants in Great Britain.

Electronic Companies

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors have contributed to the recent growth in Scottish-based electronic companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A range of factors have contributed to the success of electronic companies in Scotland. These include the availability of a highly skilled labour force, backed by a strong higher education system, a diversity of established electronics companies and products which has led to the development of a supply infrastructure, low operational costs, good industrial relations, and the support and encouragement of the Scottish Office, the Scottish Development Agency and Locate in Scotland, the joint inward investment arm of the Scottish Office and the agency.

NHS Reform

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters he has received from general practitioners, either direct or via hon. Members (a) supporting and (b) opposing the Government's proposals in the White Paper on new contracts.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not possible to supply the information in the form requested. About 1,000 letters have been received either from GPs or through hon. Members about the White Paper "Working for Patients" and the new contract for GPs. Many of these letters were written before the new contract proposals were issued in Scotland; and many are based upon a misunderstanding of the proposals in both documents. Some items in both documents are supported; others are queried or opposed.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his estimates of the numbers of potential first-time voters in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Dundee who failed to submit their names and addresses for entry on current electoral registers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated numbers are approximately 2,200 in Glasgow, 1,800 in Edinburgh, 1,000 in Aberdeen and 1,000 in Dundee. These 6,000 represent 29 per cent. of the estimate of 16 and 17-year-olds eligible to be included in the registers for those cities. This is the same percentage as in both 1988 and 1987.

Highland Health Board

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show for each of the members of the Highland health board their experience, expertise and background.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Flood Damage

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether special Government assistance to local authorities will be made available in the light of the floods and storms of February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I indicated to the House on 14 February that I had invited local authorities and others to provide details of the damage which had occurred and of the remedial costs. I made it clear that in considering whether special Government help was needed, particularly to local authorities, the same principles would be applied as in the past. Highland regional council, the worst affected, Inverness district council and 43 housing authorities have responded. I have also received a number of representations from hon. Members, the National Farmers Union of Scotland, Scottish Landowners Federation and from individuals.

Having reviewed the information now available to me, I am pleased to announce that the financial scheme to assist local authorities in emergencies—the Bellwin scheme—will be made available on this occasion on the same basis as it operated in England and Wales in 1987. This will ensure that special financial assistance goes to those local authorities which, as a consequence of the emergency, would otherwise incur an undue financial burden in providing relief and carrying out immediate works to safeguard life or property. Prudent authorities have long provided in their budgets for contingencies and emergencies and the scheme therefore requires authorities to meet the first tranche of expenditure on emergency work up to a threshold. I am setting the threshold at a level equivalent to that used in 1987 which is 0·32 or a penny rate product. Eligible expenditure above that will attract 75 per cent. Government grant. My Department is writing today to all Scottish local authorities explaining how the scheme operates and it will be up to any authority that considers itself eligible to apply to the Department. The scheme does not cover losses that are insurable.

On housing, 33 out of the 43 authorities which replied have estimated some additional housing revenue expenditure but only in one case (Lochaber) above the Bellwin threshold. Local authority capital expenditure is not covered by the Bellwin scheme. However, five authorities also reported a compelling need for increased housing capital expenditure and in the final housing capital allocations for 1989-90 I announced on 29 March I included extra capital allocations totalling £1·7 million for these authorities. Concerning other capital expenditure it would appear that authorities can manage within the capital allocations for 1989-90 which I increased by 16 per cent. over the previous year, but any unmanageable items can, if necessary, be included in their financial plans they will be submitting later this year and which will be carefully considered.

On the flooding of land and agricultural damage, grant-aid is available under the farm and conservation grant scheme. for those farmers who already have plans under the agriculture improvement scheme (EC) or agriculture and horticulture development scheme my officials will consider as sympathetically as possible any applications to vary the plans in order to remedy damage caused by the floods. It is clear that the main problem caused by the flooding and high winds has been the breaching of agricultural floodbanks. Grant for these works is already available at 50 per cent. in the less favoured areas and 40 per cent. elsewhere. Given the seriousness of the problems caused I am satisfied that additional aid is justified and am therefore proposing to increase these grants by 50 per cent., i.e. to 75 per cent. and 60 per cent., for a six months period from today in order to encourage riparian owners and fish farmers to carry out the necessary work. In making available this enhanced assistance, I am particularly conscious of the problems of those in the Conon area. I have consequently called for a more detailed report covering not only the agricultural interest of the area but the public safety aspects associated with the A832 and Conon village. In the light of that report I will review whether any government assistance is necessary.

On forestry, I have received advice from the Forestry Commission from which I have concluded that while a number of individual estates have suffered significant wind blow the scale of damage is not beyond existing harvesting resources and that there is likely to be little overall effect on the timber market. Almost 4 million cu m of timber were lost in the south in 1987 and timber prices were badly affected. The February storms damaged 0·3 million cu m and there has not been the same effect on timber prices. Planting grants are already available. There does not seem, therefore, to be a need for any special measures in this sector.

On private property the same principles that have applied in the past will apply on this occasion, namely that the Government cannot meet damage to private property which is normally insurable, otherwise few would take out insurance.

I have also considered assessments of damage and cost from other public services and utilities for which I am responsible. The physical damage and other repair costs will be found from within my resources.

The measures that I have announced will, I hope, be welcomed as providing both short-term assistance to those local authorities who undertook emergency work as well as assistance with repair in the longer term.

Business Rate

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the organisations and individuals who have responded to the 1989 consultation document on the transitional arrangements for non-domestic rating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment issued a consultation paper on 15 February setting out the Government's proposals for transitional arrangements to introduce gradually in England and Wales the changes resulting from the revaluation and introduction of the uniform business rate in 1990. We have made it clear that although the magnitude of the changes will be less in Scotland in 1990, Scottish business ratepayers will benefit from the same level of protection against any significant increases in rates bills. The detailed arrangements for implementing this phasing will be the subject of consultations later this year.

Community Charge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest cost estimate for the collection of community charge as a proportion of the costs of collection of the rates.

Mr. Lang: Based on the latest estimates provided by regional and islands councils, the cost of collection of the community charge as a proportion of the cost of rates collection is 1.9:1.

Clyde Port Authority

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland upon what statutory basis the Clyde port authority is founded; what is the productive acreage held by it; and what acreage of property it has available for development.

Mr. Portillo: The Clyde port authority is a trust established by the Clyde Port Authority Order Confirmation act 1965. Questions about the authority's land holdings are for it to answer; the Department does not have this information.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Accounts

Q38. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will introduce legislation to require private secretaries to Cabinet Ministers, and chief departmental press officers who have lodged their accounts of departmental business for safe keeping in bank vaults to transfer such accounts after a three-year period to departmental records.

The Prime Minister: No.

STUC

Q62. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Environment

Q100. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the quality of the environment.

Q186. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the quality of the environment.

Q208. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the quality of the environment.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations, many of which echo this Government's concern to maintain and improve environmental standards.

Training Schemes

Q119. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the operating of training schemes for those seeking employment.

Q128. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the quality of training schemes for those seeking employment.

Q144. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received regarding the operating of training schemes for those seeking employment.

The Prime Minister: I receive many comments about YTS and employment training, both of which are successful in training people for jobs.

Bournemouth

Q129. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to Bournemouth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Q151. Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will now visit the Settle to Carlisle railway.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

MV Perintis

Q160. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if, following the foundering of the MV Perintis, in the channel on or about 13 March, with its cargo of the pesticides Permethrin, Cypermethrin and the organochlorine Lindane, Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to put to the international community concerning the implementation of a hazardous and noxious substances convention; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is one of four states developing alternative approaches for a future hazardous and noxious substances convention. These alternatives will be considered by the Internation Maritime Organisation's legal committee at its meeting in 1990. The Department of Transport is to host a meeting to discuss the common elements of tne four alternatives in May.

European Community

Mr. Soames: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the objectives of Her Majesty's Government's policy on the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is an active and committed member of the European Community. We want a prosperous, competitive and united Europe, open to enterprise and so creating more wealth, more jobs and more consumer choice. That is why we strongly support the 1992 programme, and believe it will benefit Britain, the Community, and the world trading system.

East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister in the light of the all-day seminar on climatic change and global warning, what interdepartmental plans will be prepared to safeguard the coast of East Anglia.

The Prime Minister: Most coastal flood defence work in East Anglia is carried out by Anglian water authority. This authority is already taking account of the possibility of rises in sea level in the design of future flood and sea defence works, and has plans for a major programme of renewal and improvement work along the east coast. Increased Government funding for flood and coastal defences was announced in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement, and a major part of this extra funding has been earmarked to assist the authority in carrying forward this vital work.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 April.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report his best estimate showing the value of output of finished manufactures in the United Kingdom for home consumption and export for the years (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) 1988, together with the percentage estimates of (i) imported service manufactures and intermediate finished manufactures and (ii) imported basic materials.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not possible to estimate a split between production for export and for the home market with any confidence because of lack of data on the very substantial entrepot trade. The closest available figures are as follows:

Gross output of finished manufactures

	1985 prices
	£ billion
1970	129·5
1979	144·5
1988	156·6

1979	17·8	7·0	6·0

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1970 (a) the proportion of United Kingdom exports of finished manufactures sent to the United States of America and, (b) the ratio of United Kingdom to United States of America export unit values for manufactures, based on 1970 equals 100.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the table. The relationship between the export unit values has been derived both in common currency, the US dollar, and in national currency terms.

	Proportion of United Kingdom exports finished[1] manufactures going to United States of America Per cent.	Ratio of United Kingdom to United States of America export unit values of manufactures[2] National currencies[3] Per cent.	United States dollars[4] Per cent.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report his best estimate of the number of cars assembled in the United Kingdom from imported components in 1970, 1979 and 1988 which would not qualify for free movement within the European Economic Community if the imported components were not of European Economic Community origin.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. Under European Community rules, cars are regarded as having EC origin notwithstanding the origin of imported components provided that the last substantial manufacturing process is undertaken within the Community. All cars assembled in the United Kingdom since our accession to the Community in 1973 have qualified for free circulation on that basis.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report his best estimate of the value and proportion of United Kingdom exports of manufactures which have been (a) assembled in the United Kingdom from imported components and (b) imported for re-export in the same state, in the years 1970, 1979 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on which to base the required estimates is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Offical Report a table showing production, imports and exports of intermediate finished manufacturers, as defined in the monthly review of external trade statistics for the years 1970, 1979 and 1988 in terms of current prices, 1988 prices and as a percentage of United Kingdom production of finished manufactures in each year.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures for production of intermediate finished manufactures comparable with the trade statistics as defined in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" are not available. The remainder of the figures requested are as follows:

	Imports of intermediate finished manufacturers (£ billion)		Imports[1]
	Current prices	1988 prices
1970	0·7	2·8	2·2
1979	4·9	6·9	4·8

Israel

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report a breakdown by type of the trade between the United Kingdom and (a) Israel and (b) the West Bank and Gaza Strip in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom trade with Israel, broken down by standard international trade classification divisions, is published in the annual volumes of the Overseas Trade Statistics for 1984 to 1987 and the December volume for 1988 (tables II—imports, V—exports). Copies of these are available in the Library. United Kingdom trade with the West Bank and Gaza Strip is not separately identified.

Inter-Industry Agreements

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the inter-industry agreements on machining centres and numerically controlled lathes from Japan, referred to in his answer of 30 March 1988, Official Report, column 478, are still in operation.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following a second annual review of the inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangements with Japan on numerically controlled lathes and machining centres, I have told the Machine Tool Trades Association that the Government see no case for these arrangements to continue after 30 June 1989.

Gas

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Government will implement the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas (Cm. 500) that British Gas should be required not to contract initially for more than 90 per cent. of deliveries from any new field within the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Maude: The Government accept the objective of the MMC recommendation, but believe that it can best be achieved in a modified way. They have therefore set as a target that 10 per cent. of the gas coming forward from new gas fields should be supplied to the market by suppliers other than British Gas. This target, which covers gas both on the United Kingdom continental shelf and imported, includes gas carried both by British Gas on a common carrier basis, and by any new dedicated pipelines that may be built by carriers other than British Gas. For the purposes of this target, all gas supplies contracted from producers after 31 May 1989 will be taken into account. However, a small number of large deals involving limited classes of customer will not of itself secure the early development of competition for the benefit of industrial and commercial contract customers for gas which is required. During the first two years in which the target operates the Government will monitor the position closely and will pay particular attention to the level of sales contracted into the general industrial and commercial gas market. The Department of Energy will publish the outcome against target for the years ending 31 May 1990 and 31 May 1991 and, within that, the level of sale to industrial and commercial contract customers achieved.

I was attracted by the possibility of placing a ceiling of one or 2 per cent. on each contribution towards the target from a single customer's usage at a single site but decided against such a specific ceiling lest it distort the development of the market. However, when the arrangements are reviewed in July 1991, attention will be focused particularly on the size and diversity of gas users no longer solely dependent on British Gas. If progress towards the establishment of a competitive market is not satisfactory by that time, I may resort to order-making powers under the Fair Trading Act which flow from the adverse findings in the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

I am inviting the Director General of Fair Trading to seek an undertaking from British Gas under section 88 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 actively to facilitate the efforts of gas producers towards achievement of this target both in its contracting arrangements and, in particular, by agreeing as appropriate to carry the relevant quantities of gas as a common carrier.

In addition the Government will continue to explore all means of developing competition in supplying gas to business users.

Barlow Clowes

30. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made towards obtaining reimbursement for those affected by the British based and Gibraltar based elements of the Barlow Clowes organisation; what initiatives have been taken by his Department in the last six months; what initiatives he will now take to seek a speedier resolution of outstanding problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1989, c. 259]: The 19 FIMBRA members referred to as subject to disciplinary action include both the Investment and Pensions Advisory Service and the Investment and Pensions Advisory Service Ltd. These two firms had close connections but were separate entities. However, in referring to the number of firms which had been suspended they were inadvertently treated as one. The correct comparison therefore is that of the 19 members subject to disciplinary action, four, not three, have been suspended.

Blue Arrow

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to appoint inspectors under section 432 of the Companies Act to investigate Blue Arrow and the Peter de Savary deal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 20 April 1989, c. 257]: On 26 April Blue Arrow announced that it intended by the middle of May to send to its shareholders a circular dealing with this transaction. The loan facility and its circumstances are principally a matter for Blue Arrow shareholders, but my Department is being kept fully informed and I trust that the company will meet the deadline it has set itself for briefing them. The International stock exchange is concerned with disclosure requirements and it has confirmed to me that it will require a circular which gives full details and a full explanation of the loan facility.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

"The School Difference"

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available in the library a copy of the report commissioned by his Department from the Policy Studies Institute entitled, "The School Difference"; and if he will make a statement on its findings.

Mr. Butcher: The Policy Studies Institute is expected to publish its report on multi-racial secondary schools, entitled "The School Effect", in July. I shall then place a copy in the library.

The major findings of this report are that there were striking differences between the schools surveyed in what they did and how they did it; and that the level of achievement of pupils of similar abilities, regardless of their ethnic or social background, varied markedly according to the school they attended.

The findings will be of interest to all who share the Government's concern to improve standards and ensure that pupils of all ethnic groups have equal opportunity to benefit from what schools can offer.

Teachers

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Crosby of 13 April, Official Report, columns 630-32, he will publish a further table showing an analysis by age and sex of all such leavers below normal retirement age for each of the years ended March 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Figures of full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England leaving full-time service in the maintained sector at ages under 60 are as follows:

	Year ending March
	1984	1985	1986
All leavers aged under 60	13,350	14,620	15,150
Men leavers aged under 60	4,590	5,270	5,810
of which, number aged:
less than 30	870	850	960
30-34	860	930	1,000
35-39	670	810	900
40-44	350	470	570
45-49	320	370	370
50-54	520	620	710
55-59	1,010	1,210	1,300
Women leavers aged under 60	8,760	9,350	9,340
of which, number aged:
less than 30	2,510	2,470	2,140
30-34	2,490	2,500	2,330
35-39	1,150	1,340	1,470
40-44	640	750	920
45-49	470	530	610
50-54	600	720	810
55-59	910	1,050	1,050

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England left full-time service in the maintained sector at the normal retirement age in each of the years ended March 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Butcher: The numbers of full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England leaving full-time service in the maintained sector at age 60 or over in the years ending March 1984, 1985 and 1986 were 2,310, 2,250 and 2,090 respectively.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment his Department has made of the extent to which the statistical evidence on secondary teacher resignations, given at table 21 of Cm. 625, "Second Report of the Interim Advisory Committee" is reliable; what comparable statistical evidence is available from his Department's database of teacher records; if he will make a statement on the extent of the apparent trends in numbers of secondary resignations shown by the evidence of table 21 for 1987 and the evidence from his Department for 1984, 1985 and 1986 given in reply to the hon. Member for Crosby, Official Report, 13 April, columns 630-32; when he expects to have a report on secondary resignations for 1987 from the database of teacher records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Table 21 of Cm. 625 is based on a survey carried out by the Local Authorities' Conditions of Service Advisory Board (LACSAB). It shows the number of secondary teacher resignations in the calendar year 1987 analysed by teaching subject and destination. The Department's database of teacher records (DTR) cannot readily yield data for this period, not does it contain information on either of these aspects. It is not possible therefore to derive from the DTR analyses that are comparable to (and so could test the reliability of) those in table 21, Cm. 625.

No inferences can be drawn from the difference between the DTR estimates for 1984 to 1986 in Official Report, 13 April, columns 630-32 and the LACSAB data for 1987 in table 21, Cm. 625. The DTR estimates relate to teachers leaving the maintained sector, the LACSAB data to those resigning from schools (many of whom may merely be moving to other schools within the maintained sector).

Estimates from the DTR for the year ending March 1987 are expected to be available shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the implications for his policy on university finances of the Association of University Teachers pay dispute.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 23 March, at column 684. That is still the position.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish statistics for every local education authority in England showing the number of supply teachers registered for casual cover and showing what incremental point on the main professional grade for teachers salaries a well-qualified and experienced supply teacher may progress to.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information about the numbers of supply teachers registered with local education authorities is not held centrally. However, the numbers of teachers employed in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools for periods of less than one month on an occasional or short notice basis on 21 January 1988 are shown in the table. These figures exclude supply teachers with contracts of employment of one month or longer.

Local education authorities have discretion to pay supply teachers, subject to the requirements of the school teachers pay and conditions document 1988, up to the maximum of the main scale, and may also award them incentive allowances.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers pay and conditions will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1989, c. 323-26.]: After careful consideration of the representations I have received I have decided to accept the recommendations on pay rates and conditions of employment contained in the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers pay and conditions of employment contained in the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers pay and conditions. Drafts of the school teachers pay and conditions document 1989, an order which will give effect to this document, and a circular to local education authorities are being sent today to the relevant local authority associations, teacher unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools inviting their comments by Thursday 18 May 1989.

Schools

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools he has visited since his appointment; and how many of these are (a) state funded and (b) independent schools.

Mr. Butcher: Approximately 126, of which about 14 were independent.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools in England and Wales that have experienced major damage by fire in each of the last 24 months.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not collected by the Department of Education and Science or the Welsh Office education department. The Fire Protection Association maintains a record of the majoriy of major fires in Great Britain, and I have asked for details. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much from each local authority's capital allocation has been spent on the improvement or replacement of existing school buildings in each of the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested was not collected centrally before 1988-89. In 1988-89 expenditure on new improvement and replacement projects for all local education authorities was £119 million. In addition, authorities will have spent substantial sums on improvement projects which they had already started in previous years.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about fire safety arrangements within schools.

Mr. Butcher: Under the terms of regulation 24 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, local education authorities have a duty to provide fire precautions and means of escape in the case of fire in maintained schools.

In the case of independent schools, registration under part III of the 1944 Education Act rests, amongst other things, on the provision and maintenance of adequate fire precautions.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost of (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special needs pupils for 1987-88 (i) in England and (ii) in Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table.

Net Institutional Expenditure[1] per pupil[2] 1987-88

	Nursery and Primary (£)	Secondary (£)	Special (£)
Nottinghamshire	1,020	1,545	4,145
England	1,010	1,520	4,925

[1] Net Institutional Expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DoE and pupil number returns to DES.

Secondary School Placements (Appeals)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals against placement in secondary schools are expected for September; and what was the figure a year earlier.

Mr. Butcher: The results of an informal survey of local education authorities suggest there were some 6,850 appeals in respect of secondary school admissions in the calendar year 1987. No figures are available for 1988. The Department has not made any specific forecast of the likely number of such appeals in 1989 but we hope that more parents will be satisfied this year, as a result of preparations for the implementation of more open enrolment in secondary schools in September 1990.

Student Loans

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the adverse impact, and deterrent effect, of the proposed loans for students, upon the number of women entering higher education; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations concerning the potential effects of top-up loans on women. The Government's proposals mean that loan repayments can be deferred when the borrower's income is low.

Experience of student loan schemes abroad gives us no reason to expect that women will be deterred from entering higher education because of the operation of the loans scheme.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the average class sizes in primary and secondary education in state and private schools, respectively, in the years 1979, 1984 and 1988.

Mr. Butcher: Information on average class sizes in private schools is not collected centrally. The average class size in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January of each year 1979, 1984 and 1988 is as follows:

Class sizes relate to those taught by one teacher during a selected period on the day of the census count in January and do not necessarily represent the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Average size of class

	January of each year
	1979	1984	1988
Primary	25·9	24·7	25·4
Secondary	21·0	20·4	19·9

Languages

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the best estimate available of the proportion of 14 and 15-year-olds in Britain, and in each of the other European Community countries, who are studying, as part of their school curriculum (a) French, (b) German, (c) Italian, (d) Spanish, (e) English and (f) other modern languages to a recognised standard;

(2) if he will list the number of pupils and the proportion of total pupils so represented in the fourth and fifth years of secondary school in (a) the maintained sector and (b) the private sector who are studying: (i) French, (ii) German, (iii) Italian, (iv) Spanish, (v) other modern European languages and (vi) other modern non-European languages.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The following information is readily available.

Secondary School Staffing Survey

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the conclusions of the secondary school staffing survey; and if he will now publish the survey.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Key results from the 1988 secondary school staffing survey will be available within the next few days, and I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy. Copies will also be placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and sent to the Education Science and Arts Committee. More extensive analyses are expected to be available within the next month or so.

EMPLOYMENT

Policy Targets

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the policy areas in which his Department has failed to achieve its targets since 1979.

Mr. Cope: I am satisfied that my Department's programmes and policies have generally met their objectives, but we keep them under review and are always looking for ways to improve their effectiveness.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Cope: My departmental staff records show a total of 1,256 staff in support grades in the Department of Employment group. The number of current vacancies is fewer than 20, of which about half have existed for more than three months. There are approximately 75 casual/temporary appointments. More precise figures and the amount of overtime worked can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Zoos

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what accident statistics are collected in relation to private zoos; and what is the record of injury shown by the statistics.

Mr. Nicholls: The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 require that accidents which arise out of or in connection with work activities covered by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 are reported to the relevant enforcing authority. The statistics collected include fatalities, injuries resulting from accidents and, for employees only, instances of disease and dangerous occurrences.

Figures for accidents in private zoos are included with those for certain other recreational and cultural activities, and are not separately identifiable.

Job Clubs (Birmingham)

Mr. Hattersley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what funds have been allocated to the Birmingham area of the employment service to finance job clubs during the year 1989-90.

Mr. Lee: Birmingham area office of the employment service has been allocated £547,000 to finance external job clubs in the year 1989-90. Funds to cover job clubs run directly by the employment service are not separately indentified, but form part of a wider allocation which covers all ES services in the area.

Special Equipment

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list those items of special equipment which can be made available on free loan to enable persons on the disabled register to do a particular job.

Mr. Lee: Help available is not confined to items on a prescribed list. The special aids to employment scheme can provide a registered disabled person with whichever equipment is required to overcome the effects of his disability in his workplace in the most cost-effective way.

Member's Correspondence (Gower)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower of 12 April, Official Report, column 588, he will write to the hon. Member as soon as the decision is taken.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 24 April 1989]: My Department has not yet received a reply from the European Commission in the case referred to, but as soon as we do, I will write to the hon. Member.

Employees (Public Duties)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints have been made to a tribunal each year for the last five years concerning failure by companies to allow employees time off to undertake public duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 26 April 1989]: No such cases were dealt with in the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989. Figures for previous years are not available.

ENERGY

Petrol

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what petrol reserves were held in the United Kingdom at the latest date for which he has figures; how many days' supply this covers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At the end of February 1989 it was estimated that the United Kingdom had stocks equivalent to 4·7 million tonnes of petrol or some 74 days cover. This was made up of 2·05 million tonnes of motor spirit in stock and a further 2·65 million tonnes held as crude oil and unprocessed feedstocks available for refining.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the information on the number and percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively, and overall, in his Department who are from ethnic minorities, to be available.

Mr. Parkinson: By the end of 1989.

AEA Constabulary

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there has been any occurrences since the formation of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary when officers of the force have (a) been forced to follow in hot pursuit alleged thieves of nuclear materials and (b) recovered stolen nuclear materials from civil nuclear plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority constabulary is required by the Atomic Energy Authority (Special Constables) Act 1976, section 3, to protect nuclear matter. There have been no occasions since the formation of the constabulary when they have been forced to follow in hot pursuit of alleged thieves of nuclear material, nor have they recovered stolen nuclear materials originating from any civil nuclear plants.

BNF plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the objectives set for British Nuclear Fuels plc in January 1987 and set out the reasons for these objectives being formulated.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department's objectives in respect of British Nuclear Fuels plc are contained in paragraphs 2.1 and 2.2 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General published on 5 April. Copies are available in the Library. Although the objectives were already in existence in January 1987, an internal review suggested that they should be set down formally and reviewed from time to time. The primary objectives of the company are set down in paragraphs 1.6 and 1.7 of the report.

Coal Reserves (Scotland)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the quantity and quality of the coal reserves accessible from Bilston Glen and Monktonhall collieries, including the Musselburgh Bay reserves.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out in detail the stages of plutonium processing in the nuclear cycle on which reports are made to the Euratom and IAEA safeguards authorities; and what details are forwarded in each of these reports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Euratom inspectors have access to all civil material at Sellafield on a continuing basis. The reports the inspectors make are a matter for Euratom and are confidential to it.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has assessed the proof of evidence, CND4, prepared by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament for the Hinkley Point C public inquiry topic III on radioactive materials management; and if he will give consideration to the criticisms made in relation to those policy issues for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the inspector to consider the evidence presented to him at the inquiry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farm Capital Grant Scheme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount, in grants, paid out by the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, under the farm capital grant scheme in each of the years since 1973 to applicants from each of the parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is not available by parliamentary constituency. It has been given on County basis in the schedule.

Terrorism

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people were arrested, detained and subsequently released without charge under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism Act on more than one occasion during the period 1984 to 1988;

(2) how many people were arrested, detained and subsequently released without charge under section 12 of the Prevention of Terrorism Act on more than two occasions during the period 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Rent Allowance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form details for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available of the total pay bill, compensatory grant received and income tax paid by each police authority in Northern Ireland in respect of police officers' rent allowance.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is only one police authority for Northern Ireland. The information requested is as follows:

	1988-89 £ million
Rent allowance paid	24·2
Compensatory grant	9·2

A separate record is not maintained of income tax paid on rent allowance.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many (a) shotguns, (b) ·22 rifles, (c) rifles of large calibre, (d) handguns, (e) sub-machine guns, (f) other machine guns and (g) explosive devices, owned by or in the possession of (i) the Royal Ulster Constabulary, (ii) the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve, (iii) the Ulster Defence Regiment, (iv) the Army, (v) the Royal Navy and (vi) the Royal Air Force, have been lost or stolen in each year since 1976 to the latest available date; how many such weapons in each category of ownership were subsequently recovered; and how many have been identified in each category and ownership as having been used after theft of loss in criminal or terrorist activity or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 23 March 1989]: I have made extensive inquiries but it has not proved possible to collate the information in the form requested. I will write to the hon. Member in due course with such information as can be provided.

Traffic Police

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, in view of the 9 per cent. increase in fatal and injury road traffic accidents and the 10 per cent. increase in casualties stated in the annual report of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, he will call for a report on the Chief Constable's decision to reduce the number of officers in the traffic branch by 50; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 19 April 1989]: The chief constable is responsible for the operational control of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and it is for him to determine priorities and allocate resources.

Cross-border Security

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the significance for the momentum of cross-border security of the announcement of the determination to intensify co-operation over border security in paragraph 2 of the communiqué of the meeting of the Anglo-Irish conference on 5 April.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 24 April 1989]: The brutal murders of Chief Superintendent Breen and Superintendent Buchanan represented an attack on security co-operation. Far from diminishing the determination of the two sides to work closely together, they have actually reinforced it and, in particular, both police forces will work closely together to the fullest extent to ensure that those guilty of this and other crimes are brought to justice.

TRANSPORT

Shanklin (Oil Slick)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to track down the vessel responsible for the oil slick on Shanklin beach.

Mr. Portillo: We received on 17 April a report of an oil slick which had been observed on 15 April by a vessel at anchor to the south-east of the Isle of Wight. The slick was described as small globules of heavy crude oil amongst other debris and the report included the name of another vessel, which had also been at anchor, in the direction from which the oil had been observed to be coming. It is not yet clear whether there is any connection between that vessel and oil that came ashore at Shanklin on 16/17 April. Samples are now with the laboratory of the Government chemist for analysis.

Channel (Counter-pollution Measures)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often the anti-pollution aircraft has patrolled the Channel in the last six weeks.

Mr. Portillo: Since 9 March anti-pollution aircraft have carried out 6 patrols over the Channel. Two further planned patrols, on 21 and 22 April, were cancelled when the Department's contracted remote sensing aircraft was deployed to oil spill incidents in the Irish sea and North sea respectively.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department is participating in any review of the handling of major oil spills.

Mr. Portillo: The Department will contribute to the review being carried out by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Energy, on the handling by the oil industry of major spills from offshore installations.

So far as tanker casualties are concerned, the Government have long accepted the responsibility for dealing with major spills that threaten United Kingdom interests and the Department's marine pollution control unit is a full-time response organisation with specific responsibility for planning contingency arrangements and taking charge of counter-pollution operations. We review these arrangements carefully after every major incident.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As at 1 April 1989 the Department of Transport employed 647 staff in support grades (that is, office keeper, paper-keeper, messenger, security officer, car driver, telephonist and reprographic grades and cleaners). There were 11 posts vacant in these grades, of which three had been vacant for more than one month and six for more than three months. Casual staff are employed to provide cover for vacancies and for staff absent on long-term sick and other leave. Central records are not kept of casual appointments.

Until 31 March 1989 the Departments of the Environment and Transport shared a common services organisation, in which the majority of support staff were based. The latest available overtime figures, which are for March 1989, therefore relate to the two Departments jointly. Overtime working by support grades, excluding cleaners, in March averaged approximately 6.4 hours per head in London headquarters offices and 1¼ hours per head in the major regional offices.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to prevent heavy goods vehicles causing excessive water spray on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are strongly in favour of action to combat this problem.

New trailers have had to be fitted with spray-reducing devices since May 1985 and new lorries since April 1986. Research is continuing into ways of achieving even greater improvements.

Britain is pressing for the early agreement of the European Commission's draft directive on anti-spray devices. This is necessary if the United Kingdom is to continue to require anti-spray devices after the completion of the single European market.

Drivers could significantly reduce the nuisance of spray to others, by driving more slowly in wet weather.

Advance Payment Compensation

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why advance payment compensation, approved by the district valuer, has not been given to Mr. M. A. E. Thornton of Bishops Tachbrook, Leamington Spa.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The district valuer's report was received in the Department on 19 April. Necessary documentation was sent to Mr. Thornton's agents on 21 April. As soon as it is returned, advance payment will be made.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will issue guidelines to prospective promoters of a second crossing of the River Severn

Mr. Channon: The tender invitation document is being issued today. Copies of the substantive volumes of the document will be placed in the Library.

This invitation reaffirms the Government's decision to give the private sector the opportunity to participate in the provision of a second Severn crossing. The shortlisted tenderers have been invited to submit proposals on two bases: to design and build the second crossing, and to finance and operate it with the existing crossing; and to design and build the second crossing for the Government. In either case the investment would be recovered through tolls. Under the first option the invitation allows tenderers to propose their own toll regimes within a finite concession period; they will also be required to take on the debt on the existing Severn crossing. Proposals must be submitted by 2 October.

The new crossing will have a dual three-lane carriageway with hardshoulders, and windshielding has been specified.

We are dealing with the approach roads separately, and will make another announcement shortly about these.

Traffic Management (Greater London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made for road maintenance likely to add to traffic congestion in Greater London to be undertaken only at night, giving current or recent examples of any such practice.

Mr. Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: Each case is considered individually after consultation with the police and the London boroughs. Peak-hour working is avoided wherever practicable.

Consideration is given to night time working at locations where traffic flows are high throughout the day and at weekends.

Recent examples include: carriageway closures on M4 for communication upgrading; resurfacing and annual maintenance work on the A406 north circular road; and lane closures for weekly maintenance in the Blackwall tunnel (southbound).

Night-time working may be precluded because of safety considerations and disturbance to residents. Recent maintenance closures have been publicised in departmental press notices.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the numbers of persons, and their respective Civil Service grades, who are employed in his Department to discharge the traffic management responsibilities hitherto the duty of the Greater London Council; what are the names and duties of each unit; and what standing arrangements now exist or are planned for regular meetings between officials of these units, together, with representatives of the London borough councils and the Metropolitan police, to review incidents of congestion and to plan for effective traffic management consequent on known future events, including road works.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: The Department has assumed the highways and traffic powers of the former Greater London council only in respect of 70 miles of metropolitan roads which are now trunk roads. It is not practicable to identify the numbers and grades of persons employed in the London Regional Office (Transport) on those roads from among their general responsibilities for trunk roads in London.

At the request of the London boroughs, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for the traffic signals and urban traffic control in London. The corporation of the City of London acts as agent. It staffs and maintains the traffic control systems unit as a separate entity within the local government environment. Officials of the Department hold quarterly management liaison meetings with the unit and representatives of the Association of London Authorities, the London Boroughs Association and the Metropolitan and City police. In addition, the unit has regular monthly meetings with the Metropolitan police to review contingency plans for traffic incidents and planned events such as roadworks, bridge closures, and so on, and to plan for effective traffic management in those circumstances.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South on 13 January, Official Report, column 800, concerning causes of major incidents of traffic congestion, he will now monitor such incidents and, in conjunction with London Buses Limited and the respective unit of the Metropolitan police, record the incidence and extent of delay compared to normal free flow conditions and keep a record of any known cause, or contributory cause, leading to each major incident of congestion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: We are considering how it might be done.

We keep in touch with London Buses Limited and the Metropolitan police on congestion points on trunk roads. The Metropolitan police make such arrangements as they consider necessary to maintain the safe and efficient flow of traffic in the case of day-to-day incidents and to be prepared for planned events.

Underground Railways (Safety)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what exercises using volunteer passengers have taken place on the underground section of the Great Northern line of British Railways between Finsbury Park and Moorgate; what were the results of any such test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 April 1989]: A major exercise to test evacuation procedures, in which all emergency services participated, was held on 7 February 1988. The need for various improvements was identified. British Rail is presently carrying out a £1 million programme which includes the provision of improved lighting and communications. It expects the work to be finished by September.

Airports

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage greater use of regional airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: The 1985 airports policy White Paper (Cmnd. 9542) noted that the Government had maintained a consistent policy of encouraging the maximum use of regional airports. They have a role to play in relieving pressure on the London airports. The Government encourage their growth and development.

We provide special borrowing allocations for municipal airports whose expansion is justified.

We continue, both in the EC and in bilateral negotiations, to pursue policies of liberalisation in order to maximise the scope for regional air services.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on future runway capacity in the south east.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: The Civil Aviation Authority is due to provide my right hon. Friend in July with advice on this and other aspects of airport and airspace capacity.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the one-way peak-to-daily flow ratio for the M25 (a) as predicted for the London orbital motorway at the 1974-75 public inquiry into the A10-A12 section of the motorway by the Department's traffic witness, (b) as recorded, for each section for which data is available, when the M25 was fully opened in 1986 and (c) as recorded in the latest available year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Human Rights (Broadcasting)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to apply to the content of British broadcasting media the principle embodied in Her Majesty's Government's documentation for the Helsinki states information forum that the free flow of information both within countries and across frontiers is seen by the West as an integral part of human rights provisions.

Mr. Renton: The principle of the free exchange of information and ideas, guaranteed by article 10 of the European convention on human rights, is central to our broadcasting policy. We have played an active part in the preparation of the Council of Europe's convention on transfrontier television, which we hope will be opened for signature next month and which we plan to implement through the forthcoming Broadcasting Bill. The convention is designed to encourage the transfrontier circulation of television programme services on the basis of a number of commonly agreed basic standards. As our White Paper "Broadcasting in the 90's: Competition Choice and Quality" makes clear, the development of European regulatory instruments of this kind is consistent with the approach of the Government towards domestic broadcasting services in establishing an enabling regulatory framework to allow increased opportunities for broadcasters and viewers, while ensuring the maintenance of satisfactory programme standards.

Airports (Passports)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British international airports still retain a passport entry desk for United Kingdom citizens only.

Mr. Renton: None.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all European Community countries have agreed to discontinue national channels at passport control entry at airports in favour of joint ones for European Community citizens.

Mr. Renton: This is a matter for national decision and practice varies throughout the Community. Where passenger volume makes it desirable to present passengers to more than one channel most EC countries direct all EC nationals to a special channel.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why entry desks for British citizens only at passport control at Heathrow have been discontinued.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend announced to the House on 14 December 1988, at column 576, the Government's intention to introduce in the spring a single immigration channel for all nationals of the EC (including British nationals) entering the country. Implemented from 10 March, this is a practical demonstration of our readiness, in line with the spirit of the Single European Act, to reduce as far as possible the levels of immigration checks on other EC nationals. There has been no change in our arrangements for immigration controls on nationals of non-EC countries.

Electoral Register

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approximate percentage of people eligible to vote are not currently registered to vote; and if such people will be able to register prior to (a) country and (b) European elections.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent major study into the accuracy of the electoral register ("Electoral Registration in 1981", Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, 1982) estimated that 6·7 per cent of people in England and Wales eligible to vote were not registered to do so. Under section 11(2) of the Representation of the People Act 1983 (as amended) claims for inclusion in the published register can be made at any time. However, no such claim can have effect for the purposes of an election unless it is allowed, and the alteration made, before the close of nomination for candidates at that election. It is therefore now too late for such claims to have effect at either the county council or European parliamentary elections.

Mr. Joe Benjamin

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will recommend the granting of a pardon to Joe Benjamin in relation to a conviction on appeal by Knightsbridge Crown court and the imposition of a fine of £150 under an offence under the Public Order Act, in respect of the case of Regina v Benjamin, 29 October 1987, before Mr. Recorder Walker.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend will consider Mr. Benjamin's conviction if he is presented with any new evidence or other consideration of substance which calls its safety into question and which has not been before the courts.

Radio Tara Ltd

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the Irish Government's award of a frequency to Radio Tara Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have received letters from the Independent Broadcasting Authority, the Association of Independent Radio Contractors, two independent local radio stations and a number of hon. Members expressing concern at the effect which the proposed Irish station might have on United Kingdom radio broadcasting. We are in touch with the Irish authorities on the issue.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the time taken to deal with interviews referred by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office concerning entry clearance in Manchester and London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply of 23 March, at column 809, in answer to his earlier question. It remains the objective in Manchester and London, as elsewhere, to carry out interviews within three months of receipt of papers in the United Kingdom.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is made available from computerised police records to social services departments, residential homes and other organisations offering care to vulnerable people who are considering the suitability of applicants for employment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements have been set up which allow the police to disclose information to local authorities, the health service and independent schools about those seeking to work in posts with substantial access to children.

The information disclosed would include details of convictions, cautions and bind overs. Other relevant information, such as details of acquittals, or decisions not to prosecute, where the circumstances of the case would give cause for concern, may also be disclosed exceptionally, on the authority of an assistant chief constable.

Some of this information may be held in computerised records.

Ashwell Prison (Food Poisoning)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the recent outbreak of food poisoning at Ashwell prison; and what steps are being taken to prevent any further outbreaks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An outbreak of suspected salmonella food poisoning occurred at Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell on 11 April 1989. 145 inmates reported sick between 11 and 13 April. Two were admitted to a local hospital and two to the prison hospital. The remainder did not require hospitalisation. The local authority environmental health officer together with a registrar from the public health laboratory have been assisting prison service personnel in tracing the source of the outbreak.

Investigations continue and once the cause of the infection is known remedial action will be taken.

Football Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on (a) the costs and (b) the reduction in safe ground attendance capacity, of introducing his plan of seating only at all first division clubs.

Mr. Hurd: As I said in my statement on Monday 17 April, the Government will be discussing with the football authorities the implications of moving towards all seated stadia for the major football clubs.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that those people who may be exempted from the community charge due to severe mental impairment will still retain their right to vote.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Payment of the community charge is not one of the qualifications for the franchise. It continues to be the duty of the electoral registration officer to have a house-to-house or other sufficient inquiry made as to the persons entitled to be registered to vote.

Broadcasting White Paper

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the proposals in the broadcasting White Paper on local services.

Mr. Hurd: I am grateful to all those who responded to the invitation to comment on these radical proposals.

As the White Paper undertook, we have considered carefully all the views which have been expressed. In the light of them we have decided to make some adjustments to our original proposals. I am placing in the Library of the House a note which details the modified proposals which we intend to recommend to Parliament.

We continue to believe that there should be a new, flexible technology-neutral framework for local services, leaving operators free to decide upon the best mix of technologies. As the White Paper noted, this will in practice mean at present cable or MVDS, or a mixture of the two. The fact that we are proposing that local operators should in future have the choice to use technologies other than cable does not imply, as some commentators have suggested, that the Government do not foresee a prominent role for cable under the proposed new framework. The advantages of cable over other delivery technologies are well known; and we have been pleased to see that many recent applicants for cable franchises have plans to exploit these advantages in order to provide telecommunications as well as television services over their networks. The point of the freedom, which we are proposing should be offered to operators, is to enable them to choose which delivery technology or combination of technologies to use, based on their commercial judgment of the nature of the services for which there will be a demand.

The new framework will be designed to allow operators themselves to choose the nature and level of service they wish to offer their customers. It is, however, important for all local delivery systems to meet certain standards relating not only to safety and interference, but also, for example, to compatibility between systems and equipment. The Government, after consulting all interested parties, will decide how this is to be achieved.

In line with the White Paper, we propose that the new framework should be based on 15-year local franchises awarded by the new Independent Television Commission (ITC). Although we have considered carefully the contrary opinions which have been expressed, we hold to the view that some form of competitive tender mechanism will be the best method for allocating franchises. It will provide an objective method for choosing between applicants, and also takes account of the fact that successful applicants will be acquiring the exclusive right to use scarce MVDS frequencies. We will be giving further thought to the precise form of the competitive tender mechanism, taking due account of the arrangements decided upon for the allocation of licences for channels 3 and 5.

We envisage that, initially at least, only one franchise is likely to be awarded for any given area. It will be open to the ITC to award a second franchise if it chooses to do so; but we are no longer proposing that it should be required; as the White Paper envisaged, to consider advertising a further franchise or franchises for an area a short time after awarding the initial franchise there.

The aspect of the White Paper proposals which has attracted most comment is the suggestion that local delivery operators should not, except at the discretion of the ITC, be permitted to retail programme services. The objective of this proposal was to provide additional scope for competition in the retailing of programme services. While we still attach importance to this objective, we accept the argument put by many commentators that the White Paper proposal could inhibit investment in local delivery networks. We now therefore propose that local operators should be able to retail programme services without restriction, and without the need for permission from the ITC.

The Government do, however, see a case for injecting some competition into the local delivery and retailing of services by loosening the present restrictions on the development of satellite master antenna television (SMATV) systems. The Cable Authority's policy towards the licensing of SMATV systems has flowed from its statutory duty to exercise its licensing powers in such a way as to promote broadband cable systems. As the White Paper indicated, the ITC will not have such a duty.

We therefore believe that the restrictions placed on SMATV hitherto could not be sustained under the new framework, and we are proposing a significant, though not total, liberalisation of SMATV systems.

Under these proposals systems covering single buildings or adjacent pairs of homes sharing a party wall will be automatically licensed by means of a class licence under the Telecommunications Act 1984. Systems larger than this and covering not more than 1,000 homes would be individually licensed under that Act provided that, in the case of an application for a system within a franchise area, the local delivery operator (or cable operator) had been given the right of first refusal to provide a service within a reasonable timescale. Unlike local delivery operators SMATV operators would not be granted telecommunications code powers, which would in practice make it difficult for them to build systems covering more than 1,000 homes. This size limit would in any case be applied flexibly. These proposals will be subject to review in the light of experience with any changes in its existing SMATV policy which the Cable Authority decides to make.

Licensed SMATV operators would be able to carry any channels licensed by the ITC or originating from states signatory to either or both of the proposed Council of Europe convention on transfrontier television or the EC directive on broadcasting (assuming they come into affect). A system carrying channels falling outside either of these categories would need to be licensed separately by the ITC.

The White Paper proposed that local operators should be liable to levy while they retained a local monopoly. We have, however, been persuaded on balance that it would be sensible not to introduce a new levy on local services. Whereas the White Paper proposed that broadcasting levies should mainly be based on advertising revenue, revenue from locally sold advertising appears at present unlikely to become a major source of finance for local services. Furthermore, we acknowledge the risk perceived by some commentators that the liability to levy might deter investment in a young industry, and we believe that this outweighs the benefits to the public purse of the modest amount of revenue which a levy might have yielded.

We have given further thought to the choice of frequencies for MVDS. We have concluded that the pressures on the 2·5 GHz band, the uncertainties surrounding possible future international developments and the limited amount of spectrum that could at best be made available combine to make this band unsuitable for MVDS. We have also ruled out the band 27-29 GHz since the 40 GHz band has similar characteristics and the significant advantages of larger amounts of spectrum, no existing incumbents and is, in part, internationally designated for broadcasting.

The White Paper also canvassed the possibility of frequencies being made available in the 12 GHz band. This band and that at 40 GHz have different characteristics and competing advantages and disadvantages. We shall need to consider further from which band, or bands, frequencies should be allocated to MVDS. In order to assess the reactions of potential users, now that we have put forward these firm proposals on local services, the Department of Trade and Industry will issue a short discussion paper early in May. We fully recognise the undesirability of continuing uncertainty over the choice of frequencies for MVDS, but this is an important decision which needs to take account of the interests of all parties, including other potential users of the spectrum, from whom the Government would welcome views.

Many in the cable industry have argued that the present prohibition in the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 on non-EC control of cable licences should be lifted, and that no such prohibition should be placed on local delivery franchises under the proposed new framework. We have been giving careful thought to these representations in the context of our consideration of the general question of restrictions on the ownership and control of broadcasting licences. We hope to announce our views on this whole area before too long.

As foreshadowed in the White Paper, we propose that all cable operators awarded franchises before the date of its publication (7 November 1988) should have the right to opt to become technology-neutral delivery operators under the proposed new framework. We have decided to propose that this right should also be extended to these applications for franchises which had to be submitted by 7 November and which were eventually successful. In both cases the right will apply only to franchise holders who have been awarded a licence by the Cable Authority before it ceases to exist.

Under our proposals operators in this category will, if they so choose, be licensed as local delivery operators as of right by the ITC when it is set up. As such they will be entitled to use MVDS to deliver services to the home, subject to the availability of spectrum. It will be for the ITC to decide what frequencies can be made available to any operators who take this option. It may not always be possible for it to make available sufficient frequencies to cover an operator's entire franchise area.

Cable operators who obtain their franchises after this cut-off date and who are awarded a licence by the Cable Authority will, under our proposals, retain their status as operators licensed under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 for the remainder of the terms of their licences. The ITC will discharge in relation to such licences the duties now undertaken by the Cable Authority.

HEALTH

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) nursing homes and residential homes and (b) beds in the Merseyside and north-west regions, by district health authority in (i) the public and (ii) the private sectors.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have this information in the form requested. Information on the number of residential homes and places in the north western social services region, by local authority, in local authority, voluntary and private accommodation for years prior to 31 March 1986 is published in "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes year ending 31 March England" and "Homes and Hostels for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People at 31 March England". Provisional information for 1987 is given in the tables.

There are two experimental nursing homes within the NHS, one of 25 beds for frail elderly patients in Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde health authority and one of 21 beds for elderly mentally ill patients, in Liverpool health authority. The available information on independent nursing homes is published in form SBH 212. Information at 31 March 1988 will be available shortly. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of hearing aid centres, and their location, by district health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Since the procurement and distribution of hearing aids has been administered by Mersey regional health authority on behalf of the National Health Service, a list of hearing aid centres has not been maintained centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the usage of National Health Service hearing aids, once dispensed.

Mr. Mellor: The Institute of Hearing Research estimated in a survey conducted between 1980 and 1986 that 76 per cent. of National Health Institute hearing aids dispensed to adults were in regular use.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to ensure that better information is available to people with a hearing loss as to the help available;

(2) what is done to ensure that those issued with National Health Service hearing aids are given adequate advice and instruction on how to derive benefit.

Mr. Mellor: Anyone worried about his hearing should first consult his general practitioner. Where necessary, the patient will be referred to a hospital for examination by a consultant who, if appropriate, will refer the patient to a hearing aid centre for the correct hearing aid to be fitted. Audiological technicians will provide advice and information on how to use and maintain hearing aids and all new users are given a copy of the Department's booklet which explains how to use a hearing aid. Some health authorities also employ hearing therapists to assist people requiring particular rehabilitative help.

We are at present giving careful consideration to suggestions for changes in the current arrangements for the provision of hearing aid services in response to the "Fair Hearing" campaign launched by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

NHS Employees (Freedom of Speech)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what disciplinary sanctions are available to Health Service managers in relation to any public comments made about the National Health Service, the health authority or any National Health Service matter by National Health Service employees;

(2) what restrictions on freedom of speech are incorporated in the contracts of those working within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: Disciplinary action and the terms of individual contracts of employment for National Health Service employees are matters for individual employing health authorities.

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hospital in-patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1959;

(2) how many beds there were in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1959;

(3) what was the size of the in-patient waiting list at National Health Service hospitals on 31 March in each year since 1959;

(4) how many hospital day cases were treated in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1959;

(5) how many hospital out-patients were treated in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1959.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on the National Health Service in each year since 1959, at constant prices.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows expenditure on the NHS inclusive of charges in each year since 1959 in constant 1988 prices. The figures have been derived from the United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office.

Dependent Territories (NHS Treatment)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the detailed arrangements for implementing the new scheme under which medical referrals to the United Kingdom for free National Health Service treatment will be allowed for patients from the dependent territories of Montserrat, Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands and St. Helena; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Detailed arrangements for implementing the scheme, which began on 1 April 1989, are still under discussion with the territories involved. For the moment, however, where cases arise we have suggested that territories should make contact with the Department of Health, which will recommend suitable treatment centres for individual patients. The operation of the scheme will be kept under review in the light of experience.

Sonia Cabey

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if payment is now to be waived of the costs of treating the late Sonia Cabey of Montserrat under the National Health Service at the Brompton hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Overseas Development Administration has paid the costs of the private treatment received by Miss Cabey.

Organ Transplants

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received seeking assurances that adoptive parents and adoptive brothers and sisters are not precluded from donating organs for transplant;

(2) what representations he has received seeking assurances that spouses will not be precluded from donating organs for transplant.

Mr. Freeman: None. The Human Organ Transplants Bill, now before the House, is not intended to deny individuals the opportunity of donating organs for altruistic motives.

Under the provisions of the Bill, the transplantation of a human organ from a live donor who is not genetically related to the recipient will be permitted if certain conditions are satisfied. These conditions will be the subject of regulations to be drawn up following consultation with the profession and other bodies.

Adult Placement Schemes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, following the recent conclusions of the survey of adult placement schemes conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, he proposes to encourage the growth of such schemes.

Mr. Mellor: Adult placement schemes have their place in the full range of community care provision. It is for local social services authorities to decide what services to provide in the light of local needs and opportunities and the overall level of resources available. We are considering the funding and organisation of community care generally in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' report and hope to bring forward our proposals in the near future.

Doncaster Health Authority (Chairman)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the name of the new chairman of the Doncaster health authority, the date his appointment will commence, his terms of contract, and his annual salary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The current chairman has resigned with effect from 1 June 1989. The name and term of office of the new chairman will be announced shortly. Chairmen are entitled to receive remuneration which currently stands at £11,868 a year. If they choose not to receive this they may in certain circumstances be eligible to claim financial loss allowance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish information on (a) the total number of appeals, (b) the number of appellants who were represented, and (c) the number of appellants in both these categories where appeals were successful for each of the social security appeal tribunals in the Strathclyde and County Durham areas for each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: National administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region.

Information is not available in the form requested prior to 1984. The tables give the required information from 1984 to the quarter ending September 1988 (the latest figures available).

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department has a total of seven Siemens ND3 printers in use, located at the following buildings:

Location	Number of printers in use
DSS, Government Buildings, Moorland Road, Lytham St. Annes, Lancashire	3
DSS, Hesketh House, 22-202 Broadway, Fleetwood, Lancashire	2
DSS, Durham House, Town Centre, Washington, Tyne and Wear	2

None is in use through private contract.

Refuges

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that after 9 October all refuge rents, of however short a duration, will be paid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 9 October people who now receive income support at hostel rates (including those in refuges) will be treated in the same way as hostel dwellers not on income support and will need to claim housing benefit to help with the accommodation element of the hostel charge. The housing benefit regulations already allow entitlement to housing benefit to accrue on a daily basis, provided the liability is daily. Regardless of the basis on which housing benefit is calculated it cannot be paid more frequently than weekly, and normally no more often than fortnightly. It will generally be for the claimant to pay any balance of the charge which housing benefit does not meet (including any amount for fuel or meals) from their income support or other resources.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, after 9 October, young women claimants will be paid the same amount of income support as other women in refuges, whether they are parents or not.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 9 October 1989 the normal income support rules will apply to all women living in refuges. Their applicable amount will be made up of a personal allowance plus allowances for any dependent children living with them and any premiums which may be appropriate. All of these elements are related either to age or to whether or not the claimant is a parent.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when details of transitional payments to refuges will be made available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are introducing special arrangements to assist existing hostels and claimants after the implementation of the changes to income support for hostel dwellers in October 1989. Payments to hostels will initially be made by DSS local offices, and subsequently from a central unit which will be set up in the Department. This unit will be responsible for monitoring the effects of the reform on individual hostels, and making payments to compensate for resulting loss in revenue from charges currently met by income support. In finalising these arrangements consideration will be given to the views of the hostel sector through discussions which are already under way.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra financial help will be given to local authorities to assist in the extra workload when housing benefit replaces board and lodgings payments for women and children staying in refuges.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Proposals for supporting local authorities' costs in handling the additional workload arising from the inclusion of hostel dwellers in the housing benefit scheme are due to be discussed shortly with the local authority associations. Local authorities will be advised of the additional support to be made available to them as soon as these discussions have been completed.

Income Support

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where after 9 October, the shortfall between a woman and two children being entitled to £80.40 board and lodgings and the new £61.75 income support will come from; and whether there will be any conditions attached to any shortfall money given.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From October 1989 people living in hostels, in common with the majority of households, will be eligible for housing benefit to help with their accommodation costs and normal income support to help with other necessities. Claimants living in hostels at the time of the change who would otherwise suffer a drop in their disposable income, after the full hostel charge has been met, will receive special payments from the Department. These payments will continue for as long as the claimant continues to live at the same hostel. They will be reduced only as normal income support rates increase.

Pensions

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement setting out details of the costs of the proposed enhanced pensions referred to in his Department's letter reference LS619/243/2 DML/17/89 which will be payable to staff on leaving his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to detail the costs of pensions under flexible early retirement (FER) as each case is assessed according to grade, salary, number of years reckonable service, age, etc. As the actual decision whether to retire is for the officer alone, it is not possible to anticipate the number of payments. Provision is however made within the Departmental budget.

Shettleston Office

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is now able to state the exact date when work will start on the construction of his Department's new office in Shettleston.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am unable to state the exact date, but present indications are that work will start on site at the beginning of next month.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, 17 February, Official Report, column 393, to take account of the freeze in child benefit in April.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the answer of 17 February to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, (Mr. Squire) Official Report, column 393, concerning marginal tax and benefit withdrawal rates facing households, to take account of the proposed benefit uprating in April and the estimated effect of the changes to the national insurance system announced by Mr. Chancellor in the 1989 Budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answers 22 March and 7 April 1989]: Taking account of the effect of the March 1989 Budget and the reform of the employees' national insurance contributions reforms which occur in October, it is estimated that in 1989-90 a total of 420,000 working heads with 1 million adult and child dependants may sometimes experience combined marginal rates of deduction exceeding 50 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

House Condition Survey

Mr. John Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish by (a) tenure, (b) income and (c) age of head of household, the following information gathered for the English house condition survey (a) the number of homes with rising damp, penetrating damp, slight would mould growth, serious mould growth, excissive draughts, (b) the number of houses with seriously defective, defective, just acceptable, satisfactory and unknown dampness and provide written material used in instructing surveyors on how to intepret these categories and on how to decide whether a dwelling was unfit for human habitation under the Housing Act 1955 for reason of dampness or other reason and (c) to tabulate slight and serious mould growth by main types of exterior wall;

(2) if he will publish by (a) tenure, (b) income, (c) age of head of household, (d) employment status, (e) age of dwelling, (f) type of heating system and (g) main fuel type, where applicable, the following information gathered in the interview survey for the English home condition survey: (i) questions 19a, 19c, 19d, 19f, (ii) questions 21 to 23c, (iii) questions 24 to 26b, (iv) questions 28 to 42, (v) question 44 and (vi) question 48.

Mr. Trippier: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government indicated in Standing Committee G on 20 April, information on these topics will be published in a supplementary report on the English house condition survey.

Housing Investment

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1987-88 outturn prices local authorities' housing capital investment (a) in Greater London, (b) in other metropolitan areas, (c) in non-metropolitan areas; (d) in the non-metropolitan areas in the south-east and (e) in England (i) during 1980-81, (ii) during 1982-83, (iii) during 1984-85 and (iv) during 1986-87 (1) in new building, (2) in renovation of their existing stock, (3) in renovation grants, (4) in loans to housing associations and (5) in other housing activities.

Mr. Trippier: I have today placed tables giving the relevant information in the Library.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to have included in the recently completed global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes, organised under the auspices of the United Nations environment programme, radioactive wastes amongst the controlled substances.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. This is unnecessary. The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is the appropriate United Nations body dealing with all aspects of radioactive substances.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the figures in tonnes for imports of special waste to the United Kingdom; if he will break those figures down by country of origin; from which ports these imports left, giving figures in tonnes; and what was their destination port in the United Kingdom; in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 28 October 1988 at column 427. It is not yet possible to update this information. Her Majesty's inspectorate of polluton expects to have the information from waste disposal authorities later this year.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will list those United Kingdom companies producing special waste currently incinerated at sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally to enable producers of special wastes for marine incineration to be identified. The decision as to whether a waste is special under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 is made by the waste producer. Notifications that result are held by the appropriate waste disposal authority.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the Government's response to the Environment Committee's report on toxic waste.

Mr. Ridley: I have today published the Government's response (Cm. 679). I am pleased that the Committee is in virtually complete agreement with the Government's proposals to improve the present system of waste management. These proposals have been put forward in a series of consultation papers over the last three years. Much progress has been made in this important but difficult area and legislation is now being prepared for introduction at the earliest opportunity.

I regret that the Committee has chosen to give little credit for this major reform covering the whole of waste legislation. Instead the Committee has chosen to make serious allegations about the waste management industry in this country which are not supported by the evidence presented in the body of the report. Indeed, the Committee records that it found little evidence of pollution from waste management processes in this country.

The Committee acknowledges that the United Kingdom is one of the few countries not to have developed its waste management policy in the wake of environmental disaster. But the Government believe that potential hazards should be anticipated and that the present legal framework can be strengthened to give the best possible protection for the future. The Committee has fully endorsed our proposals to extend legal responsibility to the producers of waste and to strengthen the existing law on licensing and the aftercare of landfills.

Neither are the Government confining their reforms to the present licensing system. We are also proposing to reform the waste disposal authorities themselves. In the only significant area of disagreement between the Government and the Committee, the Government do not propose to follow the recommendation to create new regional waste regulation authorities or an environmental protection agency. Instead, the Government propose to build on the strengths of the present system by separating waste regulation from authorities' own operations and providing clearer and more accountable procedures for new waste regulation authorities to operate by.

The Government firmly believe that waste management practices in the United Kingdom are environmentally safe and our record, in comparison to many other countries, fully supports that view. The improvements to be made in legislation and enforcement will be our continuing safeguard against pollution from wastes for many years to come.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to those companies currently using ocean incineration to develop alternative means of disposal as a means of ending toxic waste incineration at sea, in line with the recommendations of the North sea ministerial conference.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply.

Officials of my Department have advised companies which currently hold licences for incineration of waste at sea of the need to seek alternative methods of disposal of their wastes. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is discussing alternative land-based disposal routes with the companies concerned. We fully expect to meet the timetable agreed at the second international conference on the protection of the North sea for phasing out marine incineration.

Sewage Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make public the costings and content for any work required at each of the sewage works controlled by the Severn-Trent water authority to meet any tightened consents approved by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, or other consents at the expiry of any of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution approved temporary relaxation.

Mr. Howard: On 7 December 1988 (Official Report, column 199) I announced a capital programme involving expenditure of £900 to £1,000 million designed to bring substandard sewage works into compliance with their discharge consents by March 1992. Capital investment programmes are being discussed with the individual authorities concerned, including Severn-Trent, and detailed figures are not available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the proposed sewer outfall pipe at Rossall Point, Fleetwood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has received about 16,000 representations regarding the proposed long sea outfall at Rossall Point. These representations will be taken into account before any decision is made on whether North West water authority's applications for discharge consents should be granted.

Water Authorities (Debts)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total current capital debts of the 10 water authorities; and how much of those debts he intends to write-off on the privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Howard: Details of outstanding capital loans to water authorities are recorded in their respective annual reports and accounts, copies are available in the Library. The Water Bill will enable National Loans Fund and Public Works Loans Board debts to be written off and replaced as appropriate by a combination of equity and debentures. These powers will be used to put in place capital structures appropriate for the new companies.

Rating Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions and representations he has had about the collection of unpaid poll tax.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no intention of introducing a poll tax. We have discussed the community charge recovery system extensively with a wide range of interested bodies.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors influenced his decision to begin registration for the poll tax after, rather than before, the county council elections.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. My letter of 23 December 1988 to the chairman of the local authority associations sets out the reasons for the operative date of the regulations enabling community charge registration officers to require information from individuals for the purposes of compiling their registers. I am placing a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to provide protection to agricultural workers in tied housing in relation to the payment of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: The personal community charge is not related to the type of property occupied. People in tied accommodation who are subject to it will, in common with all chargepayers, have the protection of the rebate scheme, which specifically links people's liability to their ability to pay.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to issue guidance to local authorities on the rights of access to local services of those community charge payers who are either living or registered in a local authority area for a short period of time due to their itinerant lifestyle.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if adults placed with carers on adult placement schemes will be required to pay poll tax.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce poll tax.

Exemption from the personal community charge depends on the circumstances of the individual concerned. Any exemption in cases described by the hon. Gentleman would depend on whether the individual qualifies for exemption on any of the grounds set out in schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Conservation Areas (Trees)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what particulars he has specified in relation to the provision of section 61(A)(7) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 concerning the need for district councils to keep a register of trees in conservation areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 61(A)(7) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 places a duty on district and London borough councils to compile and keep available for inspection a register of notices served on the council of intention to carry out work on trees in conservation areas, where such trees are not already protected by tree preservation orders or otherwise exempt. It also empowers the Secretary of State to determine what particulars should be included in such registers. The following matters were specified for this purpose in DOE circular 36/78:

(a) the address of the land on which the tree stands and sufficient information to identify the tree;
(b) details of the work proposed.

Water Charges

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the justification for the proposed increase in water charges by the Eastbourne waterworks; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the charges to (a) domestic consumers on and off meters and (b) private industry and public undertakings.

Mr. Howard: It is for the company to satisfy itself that the charges that it levies are within its statutory powers. The specific information requested is not held centrally.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps will be taken after privatisation to stop the water supply undertakings from inflating their costs in order to inflate their profits.

Mr. Howard: After privatisation inflated costs will reduce the companies' profits because their charges levels will be limited. In reviewing the charges limits the Director General of Water Services will be able to obtain all the information needed to assess the cost of operation of an efficient undertaking, and to set the limits accordingly.

Rates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his proposals for determining the allowance to be made to local authorities for the collection of non-domestic rates and for offsetting losses or collection against their contribution to the national non-domestic rate pool.

Mr. Gummer: Our proposals were published in a consultation paper on "Payments into the National Non-Domestic Rating Pool" issued on 16 March. The closing date for responses is 12 May and discussions with the local authority associations are continuing. I am placing copies of the consultation paper in the Library.

SSSIs (Planning Applications)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the criteria which apply in considering whether a planning application affecting a site of special scientific interest should be referred to him.

Mr. Chope: Every request to call in a planning application is considered on the individual merits of the case. In general, applications are called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. Such cases may include, for example, those which in our opinion could have wide effects beyond their immediate locality, which give rise to substantial regional or national controversy, which may conflict with national policy on important matters, and those where the interests of national security or of foreign Governments may be involved. In considering whether to call in an application affecting a site of special scientific interest the scale of the proposed development and the extent of its effect on the site would be relevant considerations to be taken into account.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in respect of each of the last three years, those cases where the Nature Conservancy Council has asked him to call in a planning application and indicate (a) those cases which were referred back to the planning authority to determine and (b) those cases which were determined in favour of the application.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Planning Permission (Revocations)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1959 planning permission has been revoked; what compensation was paid on each occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is primarily for the local planning authority to decide, having regard to the development plan and to any other material consideration, whether to revoke any planning permission. Between April 1979 and December 1988 my right hon. Friend and his predecessors confirmed more than 1,300 revocation orders. Information is not available centrally about the number of unopposed orders which required no confirmation or about the amounts of compensation which were paid by local authorities.

Cryptosporidium

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what moves he has initiated, following the outbreak in February of diarrhoea and sickness caused by the waterborne parasite cryptosporidium, to ensure that every water authority has the expertise to carry out tests to detect cryptosporidium.

Mr. Howard: Monitoring methods necessary to detect cryptosporidium in water supplies are being examined by the group of experts established by the Government under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch. I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 2 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) at column 286.

Bradford (Development)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any application from Bradford local authority of Arrocraft plc either separately or jointly for a city grant for the development of the Bradford West End scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No formal application for city grant for the Bradford West End scheme has been received by the Department.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had any applications for in and out agreements for the purchase of land for the West End development in Bradford by Bradford council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Alaska Works Development, Southwark

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the commercial office development of the Alaska works development in Southwark and on the area of office accommodation made available under this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Alaska works project has been offered city grant of £4,162,000. The project comprises the part refurbishment and part redevelopment of a former fur treatment works to provide a business complex of at least 127,000 sq. ft. of net lettable floor space. The space available will accommodate offices, workshops, studios and training facilities. Associated car parking facilities and a garden for use by local residents, and users of the development, will be provided.

Homelessness

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is going to publish the findings of the study of homelessness carried out by the university of Birmingham's centre for urban and regional studies.

Mr. Trippier: The findings are published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library. We very much welcome this study which has lessons for both central and local government.

The report demonstrates clearly that homelessness is a complex problem which needs attacking on a number of fronts. Local authorities are generally doing a good job, but there is room for streamlining procedures and standardising the service to homeless people across local authorities. Conditions in temporary accommodation, and bed and breakfast in particular, are often poor and people are waiting for long periods to be rehoused into permanent accommodation.

The Department has considered the report carefully and the findings are providing a valuable contribution to our current review of homelessness legislation.

Rivers (Yorkshire)

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a schedule showing the changes between 1987 and 1988 in the quality of rivers in the Yorkshire region, including the lengths over which improvement or deterioration has taken place.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I understand that the lengths of rivers and canals recorded in each water quality class by the Yorkshire water authority were as follows:

Freshwater quality class — Kilometres

	1987	1988
1A Good quality	2,264	2,261
1B Good quality	2,198	2,141
2 Fair quality	779	839
3 Poor quality	629	646
4 Bad quality	165	148
Total	6,035	6,035

These figures are not directly comparable with those obtained from the 1985 river quality survey of England and Wales as they are based on more limited surveys carried out by the water authority.

Carbon (Levy)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposal agreed by the Toronto conference for a world levy on carbon as a basis for an environmental fund.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: One of the three working groups set up by the intergovernmental panel on climate change, in which the United Kingdom is playing a full part, is studying a variety of possible international response strategies, including financial and economic measures. The work is at an early stage but the IPCC has set itself the ambitious target of reporting by mid-1990.

Anti-competitive Practices

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer of 17 April, Official Report, column 36, to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) he will list the approximately 80 complaints of alleged anti-competitive practices identifying the local authorities involved.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: The Department has received complaints alleging anti-competitive behaviour by the following authorities:

Bathing Water (Pollution)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the highest level of (a) E. coli and (b) total coliforms per 100 ml. found in the 1988 bathing waters survey at Seaton Carew centre, Hartlepool bay; and if he will publish in the Official Report full details of all the water samples at Seaton Carew centre that failed both the total coliform and the faecal coliform tests.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 April 1989]: The results obtained during the 1988 bathing season at the Seaton Carew centre sampling point are as follows:

Date	Total coliforms number per 100 ml	Faecal coliforms number per 100 ml
6 May 1988	110	80
20 May 1988	3,500	680
14 June 1988	3,700	1,200
24 June 1988	10	10
1 July 1988	13,000*	13,000*
15 July 1988	820	220
29 July 1988	3,100	600
3 August 1988	2,900	670
25 August 1988	3,700	2,000
31 August 1988	10,000	3,000*
2 September 1988	110,000*	110,000*
19 September 1988	3,000,000*	3,000,000*

Those results marked with an asterisk do not comply with the relevant imperative standard set in directive 76/160/EEC and those for 19 September are wholly exceptional. Northumbrian water authority has plans to improve the bathing waters at Seaton Carew to ensure that they consistently meet the EC standards.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the cost of bringing beaches in Norfolk up to EEC standards; and from what date he expects the standards to be met.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 April 1989]: My right hon. Friend has asked Anglian water authority to draw up detailed plans with a view to bringing its bathing waters up to EC standards by 1995. Until these plans have been fully assessed it is not possible to give details of the cost involved.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department holds that enables him to assess the extent to which potable water in England complies with the European Community directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/77/EEC).

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 April 1989]: The Department has information about supplies which regularly do not meet one or other of the standards in the directive and about programmes to achieve compliance. Information concerning supplies where there is occasional non-compliance is currently being submitted by water undertakers to the Department in the context of further improvement programmes.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost at current prices to each water authority in England of complying with the European Community directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/77/EEC).

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 April 1989]: Water undertakers have submitted to the Department projections of the costs involved in complying with the EC drinking water directive. We are reviewing these and discussing them with individual water undertakers. Until we have examined all the programmes it is not possible to estimate the costs. However, the programme will be included in prospectuses to be published later this year.

Church House, Westminster

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the European Economic Community guide levels and maximum admissible concentration levels for pollutants are exceeded by the drinking water supply in Church house, Westminster.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 April 1989]: The maximum admissible concentrations for drinking water are exceeded for sodium and fluoride. Those exceeding the guide levels are chlorides, sulphates, zinc and iron.

DEFENCE

Low-flying Aircraft

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the new monitoring service he is installing to detect those low-flying service aircraft which disobey their given height instructions.

Mr. Neubert: The RAF police conduct surveys of military low flying in the United Kingdom from time to time to establish that height and other rules are being observed. Following trials, it has been decided that a Skyguard fire control radar system will be deployed in a low-flying monitoring role later this year and this should provide a valuable aid to the RAF police in this work. Surveys of low flying in the United Kingdom have shown that there is a healthy respect for low-flying regulations and the new system should provide further confirmation of the high standards and professionalism of the Royal Air Force.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for the new monitoring service used to detect aircraft flying below permitted levels to operate in the areas around Leamington Spa which are under the service training flight paths.

Mr. Neubert: The RAF police monitor low flying at different locations in the United Kingdom during the course of the year, but it is not our practice to release details of the programe in advance.

Command and Control System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the new computer system at the recently opened United Kingdom air defence ground defence environment command and control system, High Wycombe, Buckinghamshire; why this computer system was originally specified to use four different programming languages; why it is being converted to a single language; what is the cost of this change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Only part of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment (IUKADGE) command and control system (ICCS) will be at High Wycombe. Equipment and software costs of the entire system, of which NATO is paying over 80 per cent. will amount to some £225 million at September 1988 prices. It would not be meaningful, however, to identify the cost of part of the system in isolation.

The ICCS is being developed and installed by UKSL Ltd. under a fixed-price contract. The number of programming languages was not specified by the MOD and is the responsibility of the contractor.

Siemens Printers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Siemens ND3 printers are used by his Department, either in-house or through a private contract; and what is the location of each.

Mr. Sainsbury: Details of the many thousands of printers bought annually by the Department are not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department does not keep records of the printers used by the 10,000 or so companies which are under contract to the Department.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the compensation arrangements to be introduced at RAF Upper Heyford following his visit there on 19 April; and if he will include the name and address of the official to whom claims should be made.

Mr. Neubert: Details of the new compensation arrangements were announced at the presentation held at RAF Upper Heyford on 19 April and will be made known in the area by newspaper adverstising and by means of a leaflet delivered to every home within the area of the scheme.

From 17 May some 70 additional homes, including the whole village of Stoke Lyne, which fall within the average 70dB(A) contour will become eligible for a grant for the installation of acoustic secondary glazing to all bedrooms and up to two living rooms. In addition, the original noise insulation grant scheme is being re-opened for a period of six months from 17 May to allow the 35 or so residents who did not previously apply a further opportunity to do so.

It is Ministry of Defence policy to offer to purchase homes which are subject of average noise levels of 83dB(A) or more. There is no obligation to sell and this offer is made because some residents may find the noise unacceptably intrusive; not because of any risk to health or hearing. Letters have already been sent to all property owners within the new 83dB(A) contour informing them of the position.

Although the change of flight paths at RAF Upper Heyford does not satisfy the conditions laid down in the Land Compensation Act 1973 for the payment of injurious affection compensation, it has been decided, exceptionally, to consider claims for compensation. From 1 June 1989 owners of residential property (or small businesses with a rateable value of less than £2,250) in the vicinity of RAF Upper Heyford may submit claims if they believe that the value of their property has been adversely affected as a direct result of an increase in noise following the change in flight paths on 1 June 1988. Claims for such compensation will be considered independently by the district valuer in the light of the evidence available to him.

The noise compensation scheme at RAF Upper Heyford is being administered by the Defence Land Agent, Block D, Brooklands Avenue, Cambridge, CB2 2DZ.

Arms Sales

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the value of military equipment exported under collaborative projects in the year 1987-88 was not the subject of memoranda of understanding which required the agreement of Her Majesty's Government before this equipment could be re-exported to third countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the context of Government collaborative ventures involving Her Majesty's Government, all military equipment exported in the year 1987-88 required the agreement of Her Majesty's Government.

Headquarters Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the reasons for the difference in the figures quoted on the value of headquarters contracts for goods and services destined for the British armed services awarded by his Department to Rolls-Royce Ltd. and Rolls-Royce plc in 1985-86 given in answers to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 4 April, columns 127-28 and 12 April, column 612.

Mr. Sainsbury: The answers given earlier about Rolls-Royce plc responded to the terms of the questions, and gave information respectively on the payments made, at columns 127-28, on 4 April, and value of contracts placed, at column 612, on 12 April. Clearly there is a delay between placing a contract and payments being made against that contract.

Sir Colin Chandler

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make public details of the performance bonuses paid to Sir Colin Chandler as head of defence export services; and, in each case, when a performance bonus was paid and how it was earned.

Mr. Sainsbury: The terms under which Sir Colin Chandler is seconded from British Aerospace as head of defence export services at the Ministry of Defence do not provide for the payment of performance bonuses.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the captain's narrative of HMS Conqueror covering the years 1982-83 is still in the possession of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Neubert: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the captain's narrative of HMS Conqueror's Falklands deployment. Copies of this are still held by the Ministry of Defence.

USA (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to seek from the United States Secretary of Defence full publication of the United States chemical weapons stockpile at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Neubert: The United States has already made available a great deal of information concerning its chemical weapons stockpile: this includes details of its composition by agent type and percentage; the location of their CW storage facilities in the United States; and full details of the comprehensive United States programme for the destruction of its unitary CW stocks, which has resulted in the destruction of about 15 million pounds of chemical agent since 1970.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place with UK Nirex Ltd. on the future disposal options for military radioactive wastes.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence is represented at official level at the quarterly Nirex customers' meetings, at which representatives of the civil radioactive waste producers are also present. There is in addition a series of technical working groups at which MOD is represented.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during the NATO nuclear planning group meeting in Canada in April, consideration was given to the large public demonstration in Belgium against the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons in Europe.

Mr. Neubert: No.

USAF Aircraft

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States Air Force A-10 Tank Buster aircraft based in the United Kingdom have crashed in the United Kingdom since 1 January; how many people have been killed in these accidents; whether any assessment has been made of the maximum credible accident that could arise from the training exercises involving these aircraft in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), at column 365, on 24 April 1989. Every effort is made to conduct essential military aircraft training in as safe a way as is possible. It is not our practice to make statements about hypothetical events.

RN—Warsaw Pact Countries

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any contacts between the Royal Navy and Warsaw pact countries are planned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In a move to increase contacts between the Royal Navy and Warsaw pact navies, the destroyer Warszawa, flagship of the Polish Navy, is to visit London from 9-12 May. In a reciprocal visit, HMS Bristol will visit Gdynia from 9-12 June as part of the Dartmouth training squadron's summer deployment to the Baltic.

On the same deployment, HMS Bristol will also visit Leningrad from 26-30 May. This will be the first Royal Navy visit to the Soviet Union since HMS Devonshire made a port call in Odessa in 1976, and only the second ship visit since 1966. An invitation has been extended to the Soviet Navy to send a warship to the United Kingdom.

RAF Mildenhall and Lakenheath

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the introduction at RAF Mildenhall and RAF Lakenheath of noise insulation grants and injurious affection compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I am pleased to announce that, following analysis of the results of noise surveys in the vicinity of RAF Mildenhall and RAF Lakenheath, noise and injurious affection compensation schemes have been approved. From today the occupants of some 5,600 homes in the area will be eligible to claim a grant for the sound insulation of all bedrooms and up to two living rooms. The scheme also provides for the payment of injurious affection compensation, if there is evidence that the value of a residential property, or small business with a rateable value of less than £2,250, was adversely affected by an increase in noise or other physical effects following the bringing into use of hardened aircraft shelters at the airfields in July 1983. As any increase in noise will have been limited to the immediate areas, claims for compensation will only be considered for those residents who live in close proximity to the hardened aircraft shelters.

An announcement is being made at RAF Lakenheathtoday to local councils and media and details of the scheme will be made known in the area by advertising and by means of a leaflet delivered to properties within the boundary of the scheme.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications to the approach routes of military aircraft landing at RAF Lakenheath he expects to be introduced by the United States Air Force; and if these will reduce noise levels overhead in the residential areas of Brandon, Suffolk.

Mr. Neubert: A minor modification to the visual approach route at RAF Lakenheath has been made following discussions with the Army. This will allow aircraft in the visual pattern to turn over the Stanford training area when joining the final approach path. Although this will affect only a relatively small number of flights, there should be some reduction in the levels of disturbance experienced in residential areas of Brandon, though they will continue to be overflown. All other flight paths remain unchanged.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Research

13. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of funding of agricultural research.

25. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of funding of agricultural research.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government expect to spend £186 million on research and development in agriculture alone in this financial year. This amply demonstrates our strong commitment to the technological underpinning of the farming industry and to public good research in this area. This does not include the additional research and development on food, fisheries and related activities.

Countryside Commission

14. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Countryside Commission; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the chairman of the Countryside Commission on 7 November, when we discussed many issues relating to the countryside. I am always ready to discuss matters of mutual concern with the Countryside Commission.

Containers (Disposal)

15. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy on the disposal of unwanted pesticides, veterinary products and associated containers.

Mr. Ryder: The policy of this Ministry is to make positive efforts to encourage compliance with the legal requirement, which is that all hazardous waste substances from agriculture including pesticides, veterinary products and their containers, should be disposed of safely and without harm to the environment.

Pesticides

16. Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the list of pesticides approved for use on fruit.

Mr. Ryder: The independent advisory committee on pesticides is undertaking a programme of routine reviews of all pesticides, including those used on fruit, starting with those active ingredients which have been approved the longest and are most widely used. In addition emergency reviews will be carried out when particular concerns have been raised.

Hedgerows

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about hedgerows.

Mr. Ryder: As I have explained to the hon. Gentleman before, we acknowledge the value of hedges as wildlife habitats and landscape features, as well as their value for agricultural purposes. My Department is always ready to provide advice to farmers on hedgerow management, and grants are available for hedgerow planting and laying.

State Veterinary Service

18. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the state veterinary service.

43. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. MacGregor. As my hon. Friend said in a reply to the then hon. Member for Glasgow, Central (Mr. McTaggart) on 16 March, at column 345, I consider it of great importance that this country should have a veterinary service dedicated to the maintenance of our high health status. I will ensure that this factor is taken into acount in the review of veterinary manpower which I announced on 11 April, at column 441.

GATT

19. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the European Council last discussed the agricultural implications of the general agreement on tariffs and trade round.

Mr. MacGregor: The Agriculture and Foreign Affairs Councils at their meetings on 20-22 March discussed and approved the Community's approach on agriculture for the GATT negotiations held in Geneva earlier this month. A successful agreement was reached there on a framework for negotiation on further agricultural reform. In Community discussions we are now encouraging the Commission to develop constructive proposals on how this is to be achieved.

26. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Geneva talks on the agricultural aspects of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster made a statement to the House on 10 April, at columns 396-97, about the outcome of the recent GATT meeting. The agreement reached there on agriculture provides a firm basis for work to be carried forward on the ways and means of securing long-term policy reform. For the short term, it confirms that present levels of support and protection are not to be increased. We shall be urging the Community to press ahead with detailed work to build on and continue the process of agricultural reform that is already under way.

51. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the United States Agriculture Minister, Mr. Yeutter, on recent general agreement on tariffs and trade developments on agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: I met Secretary Yeutter in Washington on 24 April. We had extensive discussions, concentrating in particular on the current GATT round. We both welcomed the agreement that had been reached in the GATT trade negotiations committee on 8 April and their firm basis that it now provides for negotiations on long-term reform of agricultural policies worldwide. We also agreed that the commitment not to increase support and protection beyond current levels will be an important contribution to this process.

Watercourses (Pollution)

20. Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the pollution of watercourses by the agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the pollution of watercourses by the agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The total number of reported farm pollution incidents increased by 6 per cent. in 1988, although there was a 5 per cent. reduction in those classified serious. The Government are taking a number of steps to tackle this problem, incuding free general advice to farmers on pollution avoidance and the most generous grant-aid in the EEC. But Government action alone cannot solve it. It is the duty of every farmer to comply with the law, of the water authorities—soon the National Rivers Authority—to enforce it, and of the courts to set appropriate penalties.

Farm Support Systems

21. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is able to calculate, using a net value of support or subsidy index base of 100 for the United Kingdom, from the latest available figures, the equivalent current cost of farm support systems to the average family in (i) the United States of America (ii) Japan, (iii) Canada, (iv) Austria, (v) Sweden and (vi) Norway.

Mr. MacGregor: I regret that information in the form requested is not available. However, published OECD studies provide some indications of the relative costs of agricultural support that prevailed on average in 1984-1986. The calculations take account of consumer transfers through higher food prices as well as direct budgetary expenditures. These studies include the European Community of 10 members as a whole, but not the United Kingdom separately. Figures have not yet been published for Sweden and Norway. If these OECD estimates are adjusted to per head of population, and the Community set at 100, they imply the following index numbers for that period: United States, 113; Japan, 142; Canada, 92; Austria, 86. Such comparisons should be treated with caution: they are sensitive to changes in exchange rates and other factors. Estimates for more recent years, when available, could well show different relationships, in particular for the United States whose currency has fallen substantially against the ECU and where spending on agricultural policies has been falling.

Sugar Beet Growers

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from sugar beet growers.

Mr. MacGregor: We have recently received a number of representations from sugar beet growers and from the National Farmers Union on their behalf concerning the EC Commission's price proposals for sugar. This was prior to the settlement at the Agriculture Council last week.

Torry Research Station, Aberdeen

23. Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last visited the Torry research station, Aberdeen.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 31 August 1988.

Fish Farming

24. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to increase the level of Government funding for research and development in fish farming.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government spent some £3·2 million on research and development in relation to fish farming in 1988-89 and plan for a similar level of expenditure in this financial year.

Agricultural Surpluses

27. Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in reducing European Community agricultural surpluses.

Mr. Ryder: The measures agreed at the European Council in February 1988, notably on budgetary discipline and the reform of the CAP, have greatly reduced the incentive to surplus production.

Intervention stocks of most major commodities have reduced significantly. Stocks of butter are down by 94 per cent. since 1986. Cereals stocks are down about 60 per cent. since 1985. Skimmed milk powder stocks, which were over 1 million tonnes in 1986, are now virtually non-existent. Beef stocks are down about a half since 1985.

Potatoes

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

46. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of his review of the potato marketing scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 19 April 1989, at column 175.

RSPB

29. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Minister and I met the president of the RSPB council on 17 November, when we discussed the RSPB's consultation paper on the reform of the common agricultural policy.

I had a separate meeting with the chairman on 3 November, at which we discussed a wide range of issues. Both these meetings were helpful and constructive.

Veterinary Surgeons

30. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects that the assessment of the number of veterinary surgeons will reach its conclusions.

Mr. MacGregor: I hope to be able to announce the details of this review shortly, but am not yet in a position to say when it will reach conclusions. However, I am glad to note that the Universities Funding Council has put off consideration of the Riley report until the review is completed.

National Parks (Intensive Farming)

31. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the scheme of payments to encourage less intensive farming in environmentally sensitive areas to cover national parks.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans to extend the ESA scheme to cover all national parks.

Cod Fishing

32. Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position with regard to cod fishing in the channel.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In line with the wishes of the area VII industry advisory committee, we have adopted a management strategy for this year's Channel cod fishery designed to spread the annual quota availability as evenly as possible over the year, and to avoid, as possible, a repetition of last year's uninterrupted closure of six months. I have accordingly closed the fishery twice this year for time-limited periods, currently until 1 July. Latest estimates indicate that we took about half of our annual quota by Easter. I am fully aware of the difficulties facing cod fishermen, and I am pursing all possible means of adjusting the level of the quota.

35. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the industry was informed of individual cod quotas for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following agreement at the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 9-11 December 1989, quotas for the United Kingdom's cod fisheries were announced to the industry on 13 December 1988.

As regards the North sea and west of Scotland fisheries, the allocation of United Kingdom quotas among the various groups in the fisheries has this year given rise to new and important issues which have needed further consideration within Fisheries Departments. We are looking to conclude discussions as a matter of urgency and will be contacting the industry as soon as possible thereafter.

Licensed Netsmen

33. Mr. Clay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals regarding future developments of the north-east licensed salmon fishery.

34. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding the implications of the most recent southern T net order.

37. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the north-east licensed salmon fishery.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin).

Salmonella

36. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the results of action being taken by his Department to assist and encourage the eradication of salmonella from poultry flocks.

63. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the action which he is taking to combat salmonella infection in flocks of hens.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government have adopted a comprehensive range of measures to tackle the problem of salmonella in eggs and poultry.

Codes of practice have been introduced on the control of salmonella in laying flocks, breeding flocks, hatcheries, broilers and turkeys and guidelines issued on the control of salmonella in feedingstuffs.

Laying flocks and processed animal protein produced for use as feedingstuffs are statutorily subject to compulsory bacteriological monitoring for the presence of salmonella. All identifications of the organism must be reported to my Department.

Notices have been served prohibiting the sale of eggs from flocks found to be contaminated with invasive salmonellas, such contaminated flocks have been compulsorily slaughtered, and compulsory cleansing of contaminated laying houses required.

Statutory powers have been exercised to prevent the movement of contaminated material from animal protein processing plants.

The laying controls on imported animal protein have been strengthened.

It is still too early to assess the results of these measures. Salmonella organisms are too pervasive for eradication to be possible but I am confident that the action which we are taking will have a significant effect in reducing the problem.

National Dairy Herd

38. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what proportion the size of the national dairy herd has declined in the last five years; and if the decline in each of the other member states of the European Community is greater or less than that in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Percentage decline in dairy cow numbers in member states of the European community[1]
December 1983 to December 1988

	Per cent.
Denmark	22·7
France	22·6
Netherlands	20·6

NFU

39. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet the president of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural matters.

Experimental Farms (Closure)

40. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association and other organisations regarding the closure of Liscombe Hill experimental farm and Roswarne experimental station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary held a series of meetings with all interested parties in 1988 concerning our future research and development programme. The facilities required to undertake our R and D programme will form part of further consultations with industry organisations at official level with my noble Friend in May. In addition, my officials are pursuing with local interests those specific proposals that have been made for future funding of work at Liscombe and Rosewarne, bearing in mind the need to meet the full costs of the work retained.

Farm and Conservation Grants Scheme

41. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on reactions to his announcement of the farm and conservation grants scheme and the degree of interest being shown by farmers wanting to pursue it.

Mr. MacGregor: This scheme, which was introduced on 20 February, has received a generally very warm welcome from farming, conservation organisations and others.

Interest so far shown by farmers is high. In England 449 formal notifications have been received from farmers intending to begin pollution control work and 83 for the repair of traditional farm buildings. Fifty-six applications for farm improvement plans have also been received. In addition, divisional offices have dealt with a substantial number of inquiries about the scheme leading to a widescale distribution of the advisory literature.

This is a very encouraging response in the opening weeks of the new scheme. I am particularly pleased by the high level of interest in grants for waste disposal given the pressing need to reduce the incidence of farm pollution.

Agriculture Act 1947

42. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is considering amending any parts of the Agriculture Act 1947.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he received on 16 February, at column 362.

Chernobyl Fallout

44. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how long restrictions will have to remain in force on farms affected by fall-out from Chernobyl.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 20 April 1989 to the hon. Members for Stretford, (Mr. Lloyd) and for Derbyshire, North (Mr. Barnes), at column 281.

Tied Cottages

45. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received recent representations from the National Farmers Union about tied cottages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No.

Milk

47. Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposal to ban the sale of unpasteurised milk in England and Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have nothing to add to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 23 February, at column 712-13.

53. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistical evidence his Ministry currently has to show whether unpasteurised milk produced hygienically is damaging to human health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The evidence is not so much statistical as scientific. Unpasteurised milk poses a threat to human health mainly because pathogens may be carried by an apparently healthy cow and passed on in its milk. The risk of such transmission is not significantly affected by production conditions.

Bovine Somatotropin

48. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from consumer and producer organisations about bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a number of representations from such organisations expressing a variety of views about BST.

Health and Hygiene Standards

49. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on steps to improve the health and hygiene standards in the agriculture and food industries.

Mr. Ryder: The Government attach the highest priority to ensuring food safety. Our policy has been and will remain to take such steps—in the form of prompt action coupled with advice to consumers—as are shown to be necessary. Recent examples of this include: a wide ranging set of measures dealing with salmonella in eggs and poultry and covering all stages of the food chain; guidance to the public on salmonella in eggs and on listeria; and the setting up of an independent expert committee to make recommendations on the microbiological safety of food. We shall shortly be launching an education campaign of food hygiene in the home.

We shall continue to act promptly on the findings of our extensive system of food surveillance and any other matters that come to light through scientific research and assessment.

Senor Carlos Romero Herrero

50. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met Senor Carlos Romero Herrero, President-in-Office, European Community Council of Fisheries Ministers; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food meets Senor Romero frequently in his capacity as President of the Council of Agriculture Ministers. I last met Senor Romero in La Toja, Spain on 10-11 April at an informal meeting of the EC Fisheries Ministers, where discussion ranged over a number of aspects of the common fisheries policy.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

52. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the Farm Animal Welfare Council; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I met representatives of the Farm Animal Welfare Council on 13 April and talked to them about space allowances for battery hens, the council's remit, and implementation of the FAWC reports on redmeat and religious slaughter.

Country Landowners Association

54. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the president of the Country Landowners Association on 15 February, when we discussed various matters relating to the tenanted sector. My noble friend has since met him on 17 April, when a wide range of agricultural issues were discussed.

Dairy Industry

55. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the dairy industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 5 April, at columns 214-15.

57. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next due to meet the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the dairy sector.

Mr. MacGregor: I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

Nature Conservancy Council

56. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: I met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council on 7 November last year, when we discussed a wide range of subjects.

Farm Woodlands Scheme

58. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the progress being made with the farm woodlands scheme.

Mr. Ryder: Farmers have shown a very encouraging level of interest in the farm woodlands scheme. In the first six months of the scheme over 800 applications have been received to plant a total of 5,700 hectares (14,084 acres) of trees throughout the United Kingdom. A high proportion of the planting will be with broadleaved trees.

Council of Ministers

59. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last attended the EEC Council of Ministers; and what subjects were discussed.

62. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met Agriculture Ministers of the other European Economic Community member states; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last attended the EEC Council of Ministers on 17-21 April in Luxembourg, the outcome of which I reported to the House yesterday.

CAP

60. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the efficiency of safeguards against fraud in the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been pressing the Council and Commission for some time to take firmer action against fraud.

In Luxembourg last week I drew the attention of the Council to disturbing reports that ineligible butter had been bought in by intervention agencies, which demonstrated the need to take action to improve the controls on intervention. I received assurances from the Commission that it would report to the Council soon how it intended to follow-up recommendations made by the European Court of Auditors in its report on intervention.

I also emphasised the importance of considering the implication for fraud before proposals for new agricultural regulations were adopted by the Council, and of establishing in such regulations specific and cost effective control provisions which would minimise the risk of fraud. I noted that the Commission was reviewing existing regulations against these criteria and received assurances that they intended to improve the clarity and consistency of control provisions in all agriculture regulations.

Toxic Emissions

61. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the effect on farm animals of toxic emissions from industrial processes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the past 10 years the state veterinary service has investigated 21 cases of toxicity thought to be caused by emissions from industrial processors. In eight of these, two involving cattle, two involving sheep and four various forms of wild life, chemical evidence was found. Seven were linked with contamination of water courses by fuel oils or chemical preservatives, and one with toxic emission from an incineration plant.

Animal Diseases

66. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on measures to prevent the importation of animal diseases after the establishment of the European internal market.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on measures to prevent the importation of animal diseases in the context of the development of the single European market.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government will be aiming to secure the right balance between minimising barriers to trade and maintaining the effective veterinary controls necessary to prevent the introduction of disease.

Labour Statistics

64. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of full-time employees in the agriculture industry in 1979 and at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested on the number of full-time employees in agriculture in the United Kingdom is as follows:

	Number of workers (000's)
1979	187·0
1988	134·9

Source: June agricultural census.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

65. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review his policy concerning compensation for the slaughter of cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to do so. I have no evidence at all that farmers are cheating or trying to cheat.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state for each month of the current year the number of cattle identified as bovine spongiform encephalopathy-suspect by ante-mortem inspections at markets or slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom; and how many of these were subsequently confirmed as infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy by post-mortem inspection.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy confirmed in each county of the United Kingdom for the four-week period ended 14 April.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 20 April at columns 282-83, which covers the period in question.

Eggs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals concerning the sale, to the general public, of eggs which have not been graded by an authorised packer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In its report on salmonella in eggs, the Agriculture Select Committee drew particular attention to the fact that cracked eggs carried a greater risk of salmonella contamination; and that such eggs are often sold directly to consumers by the producer at the farm gate, door-to-door or in a public market. These direct sales by producers of their own production are not covered by the European Council regulations laying down standards for egg marketing.

Cracked eggs carry an increased risk of contamination because the cracks facilitate entry of bacteria into the inside of the egg, for example through contact with farmyard manure or dust, which may contain salmonella. The Government therefore propose to ban the retail sale by egg producers of eggs with cracks visible to the naked eye. We have today issued a consultation document seeking the view of interested organisations on this proposal and are seeking comments within two months.

I have placed a copy of the consultation document in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

1 My Department has 474 permanent staff employed in the office support grades.

1 There are 38 vacancies, four existed for over one month and 34 have existed for over three months.

1 There are 24 casual appointments.

1 During the period 1 September 1988—31 December 1988 office support grades employed in central London worked approximately 9,900 hours overtime; those outside central London worked approximately 1,700 hours overtime.

[1] As at 21 April 1989.

Slaughterhouses

Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make it his policy to ensure that by the end of 1991 all red meat slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom conform to EEC export standards.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The standards of hygiene and meat inspection required by our regulations for non-exporting plants are similar to those required for intra-Community trade. There are however different structural standards, and exporting plants are required to operate under veterinary supervision. Non-exporting plants are supervised by environmental health officers for whom we have high regard.

I shall be discussing with the EC Commission and other member states the rules which are to be adopted for all slaughterhouses on completion of the internal market. In those discussions I shall take account of views expresed to my by the interests concerned.

Apples, Cheese and Eggs

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue a statement confirming that it is safe to eat apples, cheese and eggs.

Mr. Ryder: There is no need whatever for the public to stop eating apples, and similar advice, incidentally, has been issued by the United States authorities and confirmed by the United States surgeon general. Nor is there any reason for average healthy people to avoid eating either eggs or any kind of cheese—though we do advise everyone against eating raw eggs or uncooked food made from them. We have issued special warnings on lightly cooked eggs and soft-ripened cheese to pregnant women and other vulnerable groups. But I readily confirm the safety of these valuable foodstuffs for consumers generally.

Herpes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make herpes in horses and any other animals a notifiable disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The herpes family of viruses causes a number of diseases. Aujeszky's disease, which is notifiable in pigs, cattle, sheep, goats, deer, horses, dogs and cats, is one of them. I have no plans to make any other a notifiable disease.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to visit Grimsby to discuss the fishing industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I visited Grimsby on 21 November 1988. I have no immediate plans for a further visit.

Lindane (Recovery)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what consultations are taking place between his officials and others regarding the retrieval of the container, containing five tonnes of organochlorine insecticide, Lindane, which was lost when the vessel Perintis foundered north-west of Guernsey on or about 13 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on Wednesday 19 April.

Cook-chill Food

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what recent representations he has received about the control of cook-chill foods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he received from the Secretary of State for Health on 15 March 1989, at column 249.

Mink and Fox Farming

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whether he has received a copy of the press notice headed, "Farm Animal Welfare Council disapproves of mink and fox farming", dated 4 April; and whether he will make a statement on its recommendation that the state veterinary service should be required to effectively monitor standards of management on existing mink and fox farms by visiting them regularly.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a copy of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's statement on mink and fox farming. The state veterinary service already includes visits to fur farms as part of its monitoring of all types of livestock farms for welfare purposes. This monitoring will continue.

Food Poisoning (Research)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding is allocated to basic and technological research into food poisoning at universities and food research associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: In 1988-89 the estimated funding by my Department of food R and D at universities and food research associations relating to food poisoning, was £445,000. The programme for 1989-90 is still being negotiated.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science also makes funds available to the Agricultural and Food Research Council and universities for basic and strategic scientific research. It is up to the institutions themselves to allocate the resources made available to them. Some will be spent on research into food poisoning.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many days supply of (a) milk, (b) butter, (c) meat and (d) grain are currently in store in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 26 April 1989]: Estimated days supply, in store in the United Kingdom, are as follows:

Commodity	Days supply
Milk[1]	0
Butter[2]	26
Lamb[3]	21
Beef[2]	11
Pork	3
Ham and Bacon	10-14
Wheat and Barley[2]	20

[1] Raw milk is stored only for very brief periods prior to packaging or processing.

[2] Intervention and EC assisted private storage only. Information on the quantities in commercial storage is unavailable.

[3] Frozen imported lamb.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Offences Against the Person

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if any instructions have been given to the Crown Prosecution Service on the prosecution of persons formally charged under section 47 of the Offences Against the Person Act.

The Attorney-General: No specific instructions concerning the prosecution of offences under section 47 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 have been issued to the Crown Prosecution Service as a whole. However, some chief Crown prosecutors have issued guidance to Crown prosecutors in their area.

As with all cases prosecuted by the service, in accordance with the code for Crown prosecutors, Crown prosecutors are required to satisfy themselves that there is sufficient evidence to afford a realistic prospect of conviction, and, if there is, whether the public interest requires a prosecution, before continuing criminal proceedings for such offences.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Attendance Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give for the latest year for which figures are available the school attendance rate for (a) the years one to five secondary school, (b) fourth year secondary pupils, (c) fifth year secondary pupils and (d) primary schools for each local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not collected centrally. The monitoring of school attendance and decisions on whether to publish figures on attendance are matters for local education authorities and schools.

British School, Armenia

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when work will be started on the British school in Armenia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government set aside £5 million for Armenian relief and reconstruction shortly after last December's earthquake. Two million pounds of this has been allocated to a project to build, furnish and equip a school in Leninaken. Aid Armenia and a number of major British firms are also contributing to the project. Work will start shortly and my Department is planning to complete the school before the beginning of the 1990-91 school year. Parliamentary approval to provision for this school will be sought in the 1989-90 Supply Estimate for the schools, research and miscellaneous services Vote. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £1·5 million will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Teachers Pay and Conditions

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has now considered the views expressed by the local authority employees, teachers unions and others on his proposals following the second report of the Interim Advisory Committee on Schoolteachers Pay and Conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the pursuant reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 27 April 1989.

Teacher Training

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places he is making available for intakes to initial teacher training in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided to make available 23,172 places for intakes to initial teacher training courses in England and Wales in the academic year 1990-91, an increase of over 9 per cent. over the 1989 target of 21,157.

Four hundred and fifty of these additional places will be set aside for the development of innovative forms of secondary phase training in chemistry, music and modern languages. Initial teacher training institutions in the university and English PCFC sectors will be invited to bid for these places shortly.

I have also decided on the provisional allocations of intake numbers to individual courses at institutions in the English public sector. The Secretary of State for Wales will be seeking advice from the Wales advisory body on the allocation of places to the public sector initial teacher training institutions in Wales. I am writing today to the chairman of the Universities Funding Council to invite the council to consider the allocation of places in the university sector in England and Wales.

I am placing details of my proposals in the Library.

DEFENCE

Support Grades

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 24 April 1989 a total of 2,963 office support grades (messengers, paperkeepers, office keepers, security guards, reprographic grades and Government telephonists) were employed within the Ministry of Defence.

During the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, the number of temporary and casual appointees was 51 and the amount of overtime worked by these temporary and casual appointees was:

(a) London—304·5 hours.
(b) Elsewhere—1,019·5 hours.

The office support grades are employed in Ministry of Defence establishments throughout the United Kingdom and are recruited locally under delegated authority. Therefore, information about vacancies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Arms Exports (Jobs)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs were directly and indirectly supported by arms exports in (a) 1986, (b) 1987 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 (Cm. 344-11, vol. 2, table 618).

Lunch-time Supervision

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects teachers employed by the Service Children's Education Authority to be paid the back money due to them in respect of lunch-time supervision duties.

Mr. Neubert: Further to my reply of 20 February, at column 445, those teachers involved in lunch-time supervisory duties prior to 1 December 1988 have now completed claims for the hours worked and the individual calculations of moneys due have been completed. Payment is imminent.

Recruitment and Retention

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the summary of proposed steps for improving recruitment and retention in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces said in reply to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 24 February, at column 847, that we were considering the report on manning and recruiting in the Army in the nineties (MARILYN) and that in due course we should be in a position to publish a summary of the steps we would be taking to improve recruitment and retention. That remains our intention and naturally such a document would be made available to the House.

Safety-related Software

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation he has had to ensure the requirements of Def Stan 00-55 do not conflict with the impending international standard.

Mr. Sainsbury: My officials have been, and will continue to be, in consultation with the United Kingdom's representatives on the International Electrotechnical Commission's working group which is developing the international standard for software for computers in the application of industrial safety-related systems. The consultation is aimed at maximising the commonality between this standard and Def Stan 00-55.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department is developing its own standard of safety-related software independent of moves to introduce an international standard for civilian industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is Ministry of Defency policy to use existing international standards, where applicable, in preference to European, national and defence standards. However, the lack of an adequate existing standard for safety-related software in defence equipment meant that it was essential for us to commence development of Def Stan 00-55. We are, though, taking account of the work, begun subsequently, of the International Electrotechnical Commission on an international standard for safety-related software for civilian industry.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention that industry shall be bound by both (a) the impending standard on safety-related software coming from the International Electrotechnical Commission and (b) defence standard 00-55.

Mr. Sainsbury: The draft defence standard 00-55 covering the use of software in safety critical applications in defence equipment has yet to be issued for consultation. The extent to which that standard, and other related standards, will be applied in defence contracts will be resolved as part of the consultation process.

Type 23 Frigates

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to invite tenders for further type 23 frigates.

Mr. Sainsbury: Competitive tenders are being sought today for up to four Duke class type 23 frigates from the four United Kingdom shipbuilders with the appropriate capabilities—Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd., Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Ltd., Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. and the VSEL/Cammell Laird group.

Tenderers will be required to submit fixed-price bids for varying combinations of up to four ships based on a phased build programme. Decisions will be taken on the precise timing and number to be ordered after the tenders have been received, evaluated and fully analysed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq (Executions)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation Her Majesty's Government are making to the Iraqi Government about the unknown number of executions of young people under the age of 18, in the light of the minimum age limit of 18 for a death sentence to be imposed under international law.

Mrs. Chalker: We have repeatedly made clear to the Iraqi authorities our concern at the abuses of human rights in Iraq. Both the United Kingdom and Iraq have ratified the international covenant on civil and political rights which prohibits the use of the death penalty against minors. The Iraqis know that we expect them to abide by their international obligations.

Vietnam

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long are current waiting periods experienced by new asylum seekers from Vietnam between arrival in Hong Kong and screening by immigration officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Asylum seekers arriving in Hong Kong from Vietnam since 16 June 1988 have been subject to screening in accordance with UNHCR criteria. The Hong Kong immigration department is currently screening those who arrived during July 1988. The screening and appeals process started off slowly because the procedures were new and complex, but we expect it to speed up as it becomes more established. Given the size of the problem and the increased rate of new arrivals, the Hong Kong immigration department, in consultation with UNHCR, has been reviewing its screening and appeals procedures with a view to shortening the waiting period.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list what is involved in the offset programme in relation to the Tornado deal with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The Al Yamamah economic offset programme arises from and is associated with project Al Yamamah, the sale of Tornado and other equipment to the Government of the kingdom of Saudi Arabia. However, the offset programme is aimed at encouraging and assisting the creation of viable and profitable joint and other commercial ventures in any sector between United Kingdom and Saudi Arabian companies. It is a broadly based and flexible programme designed to provide the maximum benefit to the economies of both countries, and is open to all United Kingdom companies, not just defence contractors. Detailed arrangements for the programme were finalised between the Government and the Saudi Government at the end of last year, and the programme was formally launched to United Kingdom industry at a British seminar held in London on 31 January 1989.

The British offset office established within my Department has responsibility in the United Kingdom for implementing and managing this programme and it is working closely both with other Government Departments and with the many companies who have expressed interest in developing project ideas under the initiative. It is hoped that the first venture proposals will be ready for discussion with the Saudi Government offset committee very shortly. Because of the commercial confidentiality of the market opportunities under consideration, and respecting companies' wishes in this matter, we cannot at this stage give details of the business proposals under consideration.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the level of aid to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have provided over £200 million in development assistance for Zimbabwe since independence and we intend to maintain a substantial programme. On her recent visit my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister pledged a further £10 million in capital aid for Zimbabwe, in addition to the £15 million that she offered to President Mugabe last October.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Reduction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is currently under way into waste reduction technology.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Research is under way at Warren Spring laboratory to process domestic refuse mechanically to recover materials, energy and compost and thus reduce the volume of wate for disposal in landfill sites. Warren Spring laboratory is also studying the preprocessing of refuse prior to incineration.

Numerous methods, both end of pipe and clean technologies, have been developed by industry in the United Kingdom for removal of heavy metals and the destruction of toxic components from process waste streams. However, the Department does not hold centrally details of all research and development projects currently being undertaken in the public and private sectors.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work is being undertaken by or on behalf of his Department to consider the implications of a proportion of water and sewerage companies remaining in Government ownership.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government contribution to the Hillsborough disaster fund will be financed.

Mr. Moynihan: A supplementary estimate on the central environmental services Vote (class X vote 2) will be presented in due course to cover the urgent expenditure on this new service. Pending parliamentary approval of this supplementary estimate, the Government's contribution of £500,000 to the Hillsborough disaster appeal will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund. Subject to parliamentary approval of the supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Vote will be increased by £500,000 from £279,923,000 to £280,423,000. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Beaches (Pollution)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library, the detailed coliform and E. coli results of all samples collected in the summer of 1988 for each of the 380 beaches summarised in deposited document NS 4754.

Mr. Howard: Such detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Details of all samples are recorded on the public register maintained by each water authority.

Bradford (Development)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether grant application has been made by the Yorkshire water authority for the rebuilding of Bradford Beck and a comprehensive flood alleviation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Bradford city council and the Yorkshire water authority have submitted a draft joint application for European regional development fund grant for the combined Bradford Beck flood alleviation scheme and phase 1a of the Bradford Beck sewage strategy. The works are included in the Bradford integrated development operation (IDO).

Once a full application has been received it will be considered by the IDO co-ordinating committee who will assess the scheme's compatibility with the strategy and objectives of the programme.

River Mersey (Pollution)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to stop excessive discharges of pollution into the River Mersey.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 April 1989]: Under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, dischargers must apply to the appropriate regulatory authority—currently regional water authorities or Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—before discharging into controlled waters. Consents are usually subject to specified conditions, the purpose of which is to protect the environmental quality objectives of the receiving waters.

My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning announced on 7 December 1988, at column 199, an accelerated programme of about £1,000 million for all water authorities to bring sub-standard sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents by March 1992.

In addition, the Mersey basin campaign involves the construction of new sewage treatment and disposal facilities and the provision of major new interceptor sewers to take industrial trade and sewage effluents which are currently discharged directly into the river. The programme, which will cost around £2·5 billion over 25 years, will bring the Mersey up to class 2 (fair quality) throughout its length.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will cease to exempt Unilever on the Mersey from the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act;

(2) whether he will now require Granox to comply with the Control of Pollution Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 April 1989]: The provisions of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 apply to all companies.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Workers (British Coal)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to what percentage of the work force employed by British Coal are registered disabled.

Mr. Lee: As at 1 June 1987, 0·6 per cent. of the work force of British Coal were registered as disabled, as published in the Employment Gazette in February 1988. Figures for 1988 will be published shortly.

Workers (Rights)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reviews he is undertaking to implement the European Economic Community directive giving part-time workers the same legal rights as full-time workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: This draft directive has not yet been approved by the Council of Ministers. At its meeting in June 1985 the Council agreed to defer further discussion. I understand that little progress has been made since then.

TRANSPORT

Air Fares

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on European air fares after the decision of the European Court in the case of Ahmed Saeed Flugreisen and Another v. Zentrale Zur Bekampfung Unlauteren Wettbewerbs E.V.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our policy objective is to ensure that air travellers are charged fair prices; this conforms with the judgment of the European Court. We are reviewing the arrangements by which this objective is achieved to ensure that they are in accordance with the court decision.

Fawley Power Station

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the application by the Central Electricity Generating Board to build a coal jetty and related works at Fawley.

Mr. Portillo: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy informed my hon. Friend on 27 October 1988, at column 320, in view of the board's decision not to pursue for the time being its application for consent to build a generating station at Fawley the Government decided that the board's associated application for an order empowering the building of a jetty and other harbour works should not proceed further. There is therefore no extant application under the Harbours Act. The board recently announced the withdrawal of its application for the generating station.

Travel (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many people travelling into central London by car receive (a) a free parking space and (b) a subsidised parking space from their employers;

(2) what is the total cash assistance provided by employers to employees in central London for travelling by (a) car and (b) public transport;

(3) how many people travel each day into central London by cars which are (a) owned by their employers or (b) subsidised by their employers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not have that information.

The Department has commissioned research to examine the nature and scale of company assistance with travel costs to employees in the London area.

Underground Railways (Safety)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what correspondence or consultation has taken place between his railway inspectorate and British Railways Board concerning proposals to withdraw guards on trains running in single line tunnels between Finsbury Park and Moorgate; and if he will place copies of such correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 April 1989]: There has been a thorough consultation between British Rail and the railway inspectorate about the possible introduction of driver-only operation on this line, though I understand that British Rail has no immediate plans to withdraw guards. The inspectorate has assured me that it is satisfied with operational arrangements. I see no need to place copies of its correspondence with British Rail in the Library.

West Sussex (Investment)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for future investment on roads and rail in west Sussex.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 26 April 1989]: It is for British Rail to come forward with investment proposals based on its own assessment of priorities. I am always happy to approve worthwhile investment and I would consider carefully any plans to improve rail services in west Sussex.

As regards investment in roads, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to him on 13 February 1989.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Support Grade Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Forth: In this answer, the term "support grades" has been interpreted as the grades support manager 1 to 3 and support grades band 1 to 2:

(a) On 1 April 1989 there were 936 staff in post excluding casual staff (part-time staff are counted as half).

(b) On 1 April 1989 there were 57·5 vacant posts compared with 62 vacant posts on 1 March 1989 and 40 vacant posts on 1 January 1989. These figures reflect the difference between staff in post (including casuals) and authorised posts at each date.

Information on the duration of individual vacancies could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

(c) On 1 April 1989 there were 31 casual staff in post (part-time staff being counted as half).

(d) In 1988-89 approximately 76,850 hours overtime were worked in the DTI by support grades. The Department does not keep its overtime records in a form which makes it possible to split overtime worked in London from overtime worked outside London.

Computers

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he proposes to make a response to the Law Commission's working paper No. 110 on computer misuse; whether he will make it public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans to make a formal response.

Information Technology

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what non-formal representations he has received on his response to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry's report into information technology.

Mr. Forth: I have received no non-formal representations on this response.

Companies (South African Subsidiaries)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of United Kingdom registered companies which have broken the EEC code of conduct in respect of their South African subsidiaries; and if he will forward such a list to the European Commission.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department's analysis and summary of company reports submitted in accordance with the EC code of conduct was placed in the Library of each House last month. It has also been made available to officials in Europe.

Guarantees

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received any complaints concerning the guarantees provided by companies with their products; what steps he has taken to assess whether it is possible for consumers to distinguish between a good guarantee and a worthless one; if he proposes to bring foward proposals to require any changes to the guarantees provided by companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Only a small proportion of the consumer problems raised with my Department are concerned with guarantees. The National Consumer Council recently published a consultative document on some aspects of the use of guarantees; any recommendations resulting from the NCC consultation will be carefully considered. The subject of guarantees generally has been examined, and remains under review, by the Office of Fair Trading. The Director General of Fair Trading's report entitled "Consumer Guarantees", published in June 1986 makes recommendations aimed at industry and offers good advice to consumers. The Government have no present plans to legislate.

Girobank

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the future of Girobank's corporate lending and leasing business in the event of its being sold to a building society.

Mr. Forth: Under the Building Societies Act 1986, as amended, building societies are not permitted to undertake leasing business or make unsecured loans to corporate bodies. Arrangements would therefore need to be made for Girobank's leasing and corporate lending business to be removed from its balance sheet before it could be purchased by a buidling society. Such arrangements would be a matter for negotiation between the Post Office and the building society concerned in the first instance. The arrangements would need to satisfy the regulatory authorities.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what weight he gave to the net asset value of Girobank and to the current year's retained earnings in considering the Alliance and Leicester's £130 million bid for Girobank.

Mr. Forth: As the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 20 April, at column 260, we are satisfied that the Post Office Board's decision to accept the conditional offer made by Alliance and Leicester Building Society to purchase Girobank takes full account of the factors, of which price was one, which we announced would be taken into account in evaluating bids.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fax Charges

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received from hon. Members seeking a reduction in the charge made by the Post Office in the Palace of Westminster of £5·80 to hon. Members for transmitting one page of A4 by fax to a London address.

Mr. Wakeham: I have received no representations about the cost of the service provided by the Post Office since the matter was last considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee in May 1988. The charge made by the Post Office in the Palace of Westminster for its facsimile (Intelpost) transmission service reflects the tariff in use throughout the country. For parliamentary business, right hon. and hon. Members may purchase fascimile machines for their personal use from their office costs allowance.

WALES

ESA Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the extension of the ESA payment eligibility to farms within national parks in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Six representations have been received on behalf of farmers in the national parks in Wales for the extension of the ESA scheme to their land. I shall give careful consideration to these requests if and when further ESA designations are in prospect.

NHS Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has as to the likely change in the level of rural general practitioner's remuneration as a result of the introduction of the new contract for general practitioners.

Mr. Grist: The Government's proposals for linking family doctors' pay more closely to the range and quality of their resources to patients are set out in the report "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", and appendix F provides illustrative assessments of the effects on different types of practice. The implications for rural practice are fully considered in that report, copies of which were sent to all GMPs. The proposals include a rural areas supplement to the basic practice allowance which is designed to recognise the particular nature of practice in sparsely populated rural areas and to ensure that GMPs practising in such areas are not unduly disadvantaged by the nature of the area in which they work.

Hospital Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the costs of the 10 most common operations in each Welsh hospital.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for the latest available year the post-16 staying on rate for each Welsh local education authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds staying on in full-time education at schools, tertiary and colleges of further education for the academic year 1987-88 is shown in the following table:

	[1] 16-year-olds	[2] 17-year-olds
Clwyd	47	31
Dyfed	54	40
Gwent	47	31
Gwynedd	52	37
Mid Glamorgan	47	31
Powys	55	36
South Glamorgan	51	33
West Glamorgan	52	34
Wales	50	33

[1] As a percentage of 15-year-old pupils in schools in the academic year 1986-87.

[2] As a percentage of 15-year-old pupils in schools in the academic year 1985-86.

School Attendance Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for the latest year for which figures are available the school attendance rate for (a) the years one to five secondary school, (b) fourth-year secondary pupils, (c) fifth-year secondary pupils and (d) primary schools for each Welsh local education authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally. However, data in respect of primary and secondary school attendance as a whole on a census day in September 1988 are as follows:

Percentage of pupils on role in attendance

	Secondary	Primary
Clwyd	91	88
Dyfed	90	90
Gwent	90	89
Gwynedd	90	92

	Secondary	Primary
Mid Glamorgan	85	89
Powys	92	94
South Glamorgan	88	88
West Glamorgan	86	84

General Practitioners (Remuneration)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average remuneration per general practitioner in (a) each family practitioner committee area, (b) urban areas, (c) rural areas and (d) Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist: The information is not readily available centrally. The review body on doctors and dentists' remuneration recommends the level of general medical practitioners' income. In 1989-90 the average gross income of GMPs in the United Kingdom is intended to be £60,000. This figure reflects the review body's recommendation in respect of GMPs' net income and indirectly reimbursed expenses which the Government have accepted in full, plus estimated directly reimbursed expenses. The recommended average net income is £31,105.

Try-butyl-tin

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what tests have been conducted in the Milford Haven and the river Cleddau to ascertain pollution caused by Try-butyl-tin (TBT); and what were the results.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority and the information is not held by the Welsh Office.

HEALTH

NHS (Reform)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many permanent consultant posts, inclusive of the addition of 100 in the White Paper proposals, he estimates will be in place by the late 1990s; what is the estimated cost of this programme; how the cost of additional consultants is shown in forward National Health Service spending plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The projections prepared for "Hospital Medical Staffing—Achieving a Balance—Plan for Action" published in October 1987 suggested that the number of consultants in England and Wales in 1998 would be 19,473. The 100 new consultants announced in "Working for Patients" are not included in this figure.

Expenditure on consultants is not separately identified in NHS spending plans.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with respect to the support grades in his Department (a) what is the number of staff employed, (b) how many vacancies there are and how many of these have existed for over one month and over three months, (c) how many temporary and casual appointments there are and (d) how much overtime was worked by them in London and elsewhere.

Mr. Mellor: The figures are:

	Figures
(a) The number of staff employed	325
(b) The number of vacancies:
i. currently	9
ii. that have existed for over one month	8
iii. that have existed for over three months	3
(c) The number of casual appointments at present	28
The number of limited period appointments currently	8
(d) The amount of overtime worked by them during March 1989, all within the London pay area	2,518·5 hours

Population Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caernarfon of 18 April, Official Report, column 122, if he will analyse the total population growth by standard region between 1990 and 2000 for people (a) over 75 years of age and (b) over 85 years of age, as between (i) the growth caused by projections of existing population and (ii) the change caused by net movements of population.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is in the table.

Dental Services

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current channels of communication he uses to keep in touch with opinion among practising dentists in the general dental service in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: Apart from the Department's standing dental advisory committee, the Department's chief dental officer, who is a member of the General Dental Council keeps, in close touch with the academic and professional leaders of the dental profession. Officials maintain close relations with the officers and senior officials of the British Dental Association and negotiate with the general dental services committee which represents all general dental practitioners.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Handicapped People (Claims)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information his Department makes available to people who are mentally handicapped and their families about any benefits that they may be entitled to;

(2) if he intends to make any special efforts to ensure that people who are mentally handicapped receive all the benefits that they are entitled to;

(3) if mentally handicapped persons who claim severe disablement allowance are automatically advised of the possibility that they may be entitled to claim income support.

Mr. Scott: People who are mentally handicapped qualify for benefits under the same criteria as people suffering from other disabilities so the same steps are taken to help them, and those who are acting for them, to claim the benefits to which they may be entitled. Information about these benefits is available in a range of leaflets from Social Security offices, and the freeline telephone inquiry service.

The leaflet about severe disablement allowance, which includes the claim form, draws attention to the possibility of claiming income support. Additionally, all young people, under age 18, who claim the allowance are issued with a leaflet about income support, and an explanation of how to claim it, unless it is clear that they have already done so.

Transitional Payments

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of benefit were entitled to transitional payments in 1988; and how many in the current year in (a) Huddersfield and (b) Dewsbury.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March at column 445.

Disabled People (Charity Advertising)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will draw up a code of practice to regulate charity advertising about disabled people.

Mr. Scott: There are no present plans to draw up such a code of practice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Drainage (Claim)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims regarding road drainage have been made against (a) Belfast divisional roads service and (b) Ballymena divisional roads service during the last three financial years; and how many of these claims were (i) decided by the courts and (ii) settled out of court.

Mr. Needham: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sheep

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of maedi-visna disease in sheep have been recorded by the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, in each of the years from 1980 to 1988, in each of the parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: There have been no clinical cases of maedi-visna disease in sheep recorded in each of the years from 1980 to 1988 in any of the Parliamentary constituencies of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to ensure that all sheep imported into Northern Ireland are tested for maedi-visna disease.

Mr. Viggers: Sheep may be imported into Northern Ireland only if they meet stringent licensing conditions. These conditions require resting for maedi-visna disease in pre-import and post-import isolation, except where the sheep come from fully accredited maedi-visna-free flocks in the country of origin.

There are no maedi-visna testing requirements for sheep from the Republic of Ireland which, like Northern Ireland, is regarded as maedi-visna free.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of sheep imported into Northern Ireland in each of the years since 1980; and what were the individual breeds.

Mr. Viggers: The information is as follows:

	Number
1980	88,014
1981	105,314
1982	42,863
1983	41,403
1984	58,971
1985	67,274
1986	57,249
1987	77,175
1988	55,535

The records available do not indicate the individual breeds.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sheep were quarantined in Northern Ireland in each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Viggers: The information is as follows:

	Number
1980	531
1981	440
1983	500
1984	400
1985	341
1986	66
1987	170
1988	196

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many flocks of sheep in Northern Ireland have been maedi-visna tested.

Mr. Viggers: A total of 418 flocks of sheep in Northern Ireland have been maedi-visna tested. These are flocks which joined the voluntary Northern Ireland maedi-visna register of accredited flocks.

Agriculture and Horticulture Development Scheme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount, in grants, paid out by the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland, under the agriculture and horticulture development scheme in each of the years since 1980, to applicants from each of the parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is not available by parliamentary constituency. It has been given, however, by county.

Mr. Viggers: Information concerning bridging allowance recipients is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people exhausted their eight-week bridging allowance payment during October 1988, November 1988, December 1988, January 1989, February 1989 and March 1989.

Mr. Viggers: Information concerning bridging allowance recipients is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Notifiable Offences (Mansfield)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish current figures for notifiable offences recorded by the police in the Mansfield area, by offence, showing the percentage change over the most convenient period.

Mr. John Patten: The information readily available to the Home Office is for recorded crime in the Nottinghamshire police force area in 1988 and was published in Home Office statistical bulletin 7/89 on 16 March 1989 (Table 8 shows changes over 1987 by offence group for each police force area.) More detailed information, for areas within Nottinghamshire such as Mansfield, will be published later in the year in the report of the chief constable for Nottinghamshire. Copies of these publications will be available in the Library.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will meet the costs accruing to the West Midlands police authority of the participation of West Midlands police officers in the investigation of the Hillsborough disaster, and of arranging policing cover in the West Midlands as a result of these duties.

Mr. Hurd: As I said in a letter which I sent to my hon. Friend yesterday, no additional costs will be borne by the West Midlands police authority. "Additional costs" include the cost of overtime worked by the west midlands police officers in their own force area to cover duties which would otherwise have been undertaken by officers seconded to the Hillsborough inquiry. The means of reimbursing the West Midlands police authority will be for further consideration.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last three years on charges arising from the misuse of alphachloralose.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available centrally.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the officers of his Department in each grade from 1 to 7 are (a) women and (b) members of ethnic minorities; and what proportion each such figure represents of the total numbers of officers at that grade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the latest available figures, in the unified grades 1 to 7 there are two women at grade 3, 15 at grade 5, three at grade 6 and 73 at grade 7. The proportions in each grade were provided in my earlier reply of 20 April. There are in addition 33 women in grades equivalent to grades 1 to 7.

In the unified grades nine members of staff in grades 6 and 7 described themselves as of ethnic minority origin. This represents 2 per cent. of respondents to staff surveys in these grades. Twenty-seven senior medical offices and medical officers who are in grades equivalent to grades 5 and 6 described themselves as of ethnic minority origin. This represents 30 per cent. of respondents in these grades.

Personal Identity Numbers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to bring forward proposals whereby all individuals would have a personal identity number; and what representations he has received on the matter.

Mr. John Patten: We have no such plan and have received no such representations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Debt

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if all repayments of debt arising from his recent Budget decisions have now been made.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the balance of trade deficit in the current year.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 19 April at column 168.

Investment Capital (Annual Return)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimated annual return on investment capital for each year since 1970.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on all recorded cases of unauthorised access to the computer files of (a) the Treasury and (b) the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 April 1989]: It is not the policy of the Treasury or the Inland Revenue to make public details and circumstances of computer security incidents, their perpetrators and their success or failure, since such information might be of assistance to potential attackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give details of his Department's policy on review of the security of Treasury and Inland Revenue computer files;

(2) if he can quantify the risk of damage by hackers to sensitive computerised files in the Treasury and Inland Revenue;

(3) what measures (a) the Tresury and (b) the Inland Revenue have taken to protect data in transit by electronic means.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 April 1989]: The Treasury and the Inland Revenue take advice from the appropriate Government authorities on security matters. In the case of unclassified but sensitive data this includes the CCTA IT security and privacy group (part of Her Majesty's Treasury) which is the central Government advisory authority in this area. It would not be sensible to publish details of actual counter-measures, reviews and risks.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether staff of the Treasury and Inland Revenue, respectively, are briefed about computer hacking and computer viruses; whether there are contingency plans to deal with computer downtime caused by unauthorised penetration; and whether plans exist to deal with penetration of particularly sensitive systems.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 April 1989]: The Treasury and Inland Revenue have contingency plans and staff eduction programmes as part of their wider information systems strategy, but their effectiveness would be reduced if details were made public.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional revenue yield from the recent rises in petrol prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 24 April 1989]: I regret that it is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the change in the revenue yield from recent petrol price rises.

EC Finance Ministers

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met Finance Ministers of the other European Economic Community member states; and what was discussed.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 26 April 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 21 April 1989.

EC (Economic and Monetary Union)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards economic and monetary union within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 April 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 21 April at column 327 and to the exchange between my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House and my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 18 April at column 181.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking the removal of value added tax zero rating on goods and clothes sold in charity shops.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 April 1989]: None.

Government Departments (Dispersal)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about moving Government Departments to the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 April 1989]: I have received a number of letters supporting the relocation of Government Departments to the north-west, including two from my hon. Friend. With regard to a statement, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 9 February 1989 at columns 751-52.

SCOTLAND

EC Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the total amounts of European regional development fund moneys allocated to Scotland in (a) 1988 and (b) 1983 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Lang: Awards of £94·9 million were secured in 1988. For the six years 1983 to 1988 total awards of £527·6 million were made.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the geographical areas or functions in Scotland which are currently eligible for moneys from (a) the European regional development fund and (b) the European social fund.

Mr. Lang: The following areas have been designated under objective 2 (industrial regions) of the reformed structural funds and are therefore eligible for European regional development fund support:

the travel-to-work areas of Dumbarton, Greenock, Irvine, Glasgow, Kilmarnock, Lanarkshire, Cumnock and Sanquhar, Ayr, Girvan, Dundee, Arbroath, Falkirk, Alloa, Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy and Bathgate; the wards of Argyll, Cornton, Gowanhill, Ballangeich, Kings Park, Torbrex, Borestone, Ladywell, Polmaise, Sauchenford, Whins and Logie in the travel-to-work area of Stirling.

In addition, the Government have submitted cases in favour of objective 5(b) (rural areas) designation for the Highlands and Islands, the intermediate areas of Dumfries and Galloway, the Borders, the eastern part of Dumfries and Galloway, and the rural parts of Grampian, Tayside and Central. The European Commission is expected soon to announce its decision on rural areas' eligibility.

Under the reform of the European social fund, which takes full effect in 1990, operations under objective 3 (combating long-term unemployment) and objective 4 (facilitating the occupational integration of young people) apply throughout the Community. Employment and vocational training measures located in objective 2 and 5(b) areas, which meet certain criteria, are also eligible for assistance. For 1989 applications are being dealt with under the previous fund guidelines.

Fishing Methods

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has completed his review of the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Fishing and Fishing Methods) (Scotland) Order 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have carried out detailed consultations with the fishing industry during the past year on possible changes to the fishing regime in Scottish inshore waters. Having considered all the arguments, we have today issued a consultation paper, which will receive wide circulation, setting out our proposals for change. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library. Comments on the proposals from interested parties have been requested by 2 June. Once these have been considered we expect to lay before the House a new order under the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984.

Tourism

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether in the light of the review of the English tourist board and the British tourist authority, he has any plans to withdraw assistance from tourism projects in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no such plans.

ENERGY

Petrol

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will (a) halt petrol imports and (b) put a price freeze on petrol sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to reassess the level of accountability of British Nuclear Fuels plc to Parliament in light of the National Audit Office report "Department of Energy: Monitoring and Control of British Nuclear Fuels plc," dated 5 April.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are awaiting the report of the Public Accounts Committee on this matter and will respond in due course.

Fawley Power Station

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the application by the Central Electricity Generating Board to build a coal-fired power station at Fawley B.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board formally withdrew the application on 30 March.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if Her Majesty's Government will give permission to the European Commission to disclose details of safeguarded uranium at United Kingdom-based military-civil mixed facilities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, if he will set out the current plans to repatriate the low and intermediate level radioactive waste to Japan from reprocessing contracts signed for THORP since 1976.

Mr. Michael Spicer: BNFL's post-1976 reprocessing contracts provide for the return of wastes after they have been put into a form suitable for safe transportation and storage.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on the volumes of reprocessed plutonium and uranium likely to arise from British Nuclear Fuels plc's pre-1976 contracts; and what plans there are for (a) the length of time, (b) the conditions and (c) the security conditions under which this will be stored.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Approximately 2,900 tonnes of recovered uranium and 9 tonnes of recovered plutonium (fissile) have arisen, or are likely to arise, from overseas reprocessing contracts entered into before 1976 by British Nuclear Fuels plc. These materials are stored under secure conditions until required by the owners and are subject to appropriate IAEA and Euratom safeguards procedures.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many parliamentary answers he has given on plutonium in the periods (a) 1979 to 1984 and (b) 1985 to 1989, respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Between May 1979 and December 1984, Ministers at the Department of Energy gave 75 answers to hon. Members in reply to questions relating to plutonium. From January 1985 onwards the total is 228.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has on the incidence of poisoning of domestic pets by substances containing alphachloralose.

Mr. Ryder: In the last five years the number of cases in which the death or illness of domestic pets has been attributed to alphachloralose are as follows:

	Incidents
1984	3
1985	6
1986	6
1987	6
1988	4

In all of these cases the domestic pet involved has been either a cat or a dog.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what controls exist on the stockpiling and sale of substances containing alphachloralose;

(2) what criteria have to be met by individuals wishing to obtain permission for the purchase of alphachloralose compounds for pest control.

Mr. Ryder: The Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 require that any substance containing alphachloralose stored or sold as a pesticide must first be approved by Ministers and supplied to users in approved containers and under approved labels.

All those selling, supplying or storing a pesticide must take all reasonable precautions to protect human health, animals and plants and must be competent in the duties they perform. In addition, employers must ensure that employees have been adequately trained.

Additional requirements apply under the poisons law, restricting sale of alphachloralose with some exceptions to retail pharmacies or sellers listed by the local authority. A record must be kept of sales from retail pharmacies and for most exempted sales and the purchaser must be a person to whom it may properly be sold. Storage requirements to prevent unauthorised access and contamination of foodstuffs apply to retail shops and associated premises.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has any information relating to human fatalities resulting from alphachloralose poisoning from agricultural and related uses.

Mr. Ryder: This question falls more to the Department of Employment than to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. However, the latest figures available to me show that there have been no human fatalities resulting from alphachloralose poisoning from agricultural or related use.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether alphachloralose has any agricultural uses.

Mr. Ryder: Some alphachloralose-containing products are approved for use as stupefying bait for the taking of feral pigeons and house sparrows for the purposes of preventing agricultural damage or preserving public health. This use is controlled by licensing under Section 16(1) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act, 1981.

Other alphachloralose-containing products are approved for use as rodenticides.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's guidance on the use of alphachloralose-based pesticides.

Mr. Ryder: In the case of alphachloralose being used as stupefying bait, my Department issues detailed guidelines which are contained in the form LP46 which is distributed to those taking part in operations. There are also conditions of use set out on the actual licence. Further guidance is available from MAFF's wildlife and storage biology discipline at the relevant MAFF regional office.

In the case of alphachloralose being used as a rodenticide, statutory conditions of use are imposed on alphachloralose pesticide products approved under the Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986. The approved label and/or leaflet will include such information as field of use, maximum individual dose, operator and environmental protection measures and first aid advice.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during each of the last three years he has initiated action following illegal use of alphachloralose-based pesticides.

Mr. Ryder: All cases of illegal use of alphachloralose-based pesticides are investigated under the Ministry's wildlife incident investigation scheme. In the last three years the number of cases involving alphachloralose investigated under this scheme are as follows:

	Incidents
1986	17
1987	22
1988	18

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce legislation to permit irradiated food to be sold in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 21 February at column 600.

PRIME MINISTER

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what response she has made to President Gorbachev on the decision he announced in London on 7 April to end Soviet production of highly enriched uranium and weapons grade plutonium for military purposes.

The Prime Minister: None. The decisions announced by President Gorbachev do not affect the Soviet Union's weapons capability, because they hold stockpiles of highly enriched uranium and weapons-grade plutonium. Neither of these materials decays significantly. In addition, not all the reactors which can produce military plutonium are being shut down.

Policy Failures

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the policy failures of Her Majesty's Government since May 1979; and if she will give the reasons identified for the failure in each case.

The Prime Minister: This Government's policies have been successful.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 151

SESSION 1988–89

17th April—28th April 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
